The Down Factory Store

www.downfactorystore.com

Thanks to our retail and "online" customers we are one of the largest resources for goose down comforters, pillows and featherbeds. Consumers that compare our quality and prices to those of department stores, discounters, catalogs and other web sites find that we are indeed unbeatable - and we guarantee that! Know the facts of down before you buy.

FACT: Down comes from the chest of the bird to keep it insulated from the weather. Feathers (those things with quills) come from the back of the bird to keep it dry. Down can cost as much as $10.00 an ounce, feathers 10¢ an ounce. Over 90% of down manufacturers find it to their advantage to add over 30% feathers to their down. It's like buying three pounds of ground sirloin and getting two pounds of meat and one pound of fat. You have paid for meat and got fat, it's the same with their down, they both do it because it's legal. We do not contaminate our down by adding feathers to it.

KNOW THE FACTS BEFORE YOU BUY IT

FACT: Fill power, this is the amount the cubic inches filled by one ounce of down. Higher fill power means a higher quality down. You will find that as the quality of the down increases, so does the comfort & life of the item.

FACT: We use only high thread count, baffle box construction, 100% cotton covers on our down comforters & pillows. Down insulates by trapping air and holding in your body temperature, keeping you comfortable through the night. Low quality comforters are usually heavier because it takes more of an inferior down to fill a comforter. Inferior down becomes clumpy and it can't breath, resulting in your becoming over heated and uncomfortable. Our high quality down gives you the warmth and comfort without the weight.

FACT: In all likelihood you will have your comforter longer than the car you are now driving.

Sag Harbor Man Gets His Car Booted, Breaks It Off And Gets Off Scott Free

By Dan Rattiner

When we last saw Andrew Baker, the former president of the Sag Harbor Chamber of Commerce, he was in his music store on Main Street of that village, nervously awaiting the East Hampton Village Police who intended to arrest him. It was four o'clock in the afternoon on Tuesday, the weekly deadline for Dan's Papers, and so when we wrote up this story last week, that's where we left him, with many friends and neighbors standing nearby, pacing around awaiting his fate.

The police never came. At four-thirty, they phoned him and told him he was a free man. The company, that owned the auto restraining device he had broken, had decided to drop the charges. His crime? He had ripped a steel boot that had been placed on the rear wheel of his vehicle and had driven away. The police had been called to file charges. Now the charges were being dropped.

We can speculate from today until tomorrow about what the reasons were that caused the police to decide not to arrest Andrew Baker on felony charges. A good guess, however, is that he is who he is. Or that they did not want the media spotlight to shine on this situation — Baker would be taken off in handcuffs and this newspaper had planned to publish photographs of that event — or they felt they had just harassed him enough and had made their point. Anyway, the order went down, from C. E. T. to the police higher-ups to the officers. Stand down.

If the value of the boot had been one penny less than $250, the criminal charge for breaking it would have been a misdemeanor. At $250... the charge becomes a felony.

C. E. T. is a company that was founded one year ago by a lieutenant on the East Hampton Village police force. These are the people — C. E. T. — that put a "boot" on one of your car's wheels in a private parking lot if you break the lot owner's no parking rules. They do not release your car until a fine of several hundred dollars is paid, in cash or by credit card, to a man with a clipboard who monitors the lots. Two weeks ago Baker got booted. Furious, probably because he had promised his mother he would pick her up on a street corner where she was waiting for him with packages, he expressed his anger to the man with the clipboard by ripping and stomping at the boot until it broke off his car. He then drove away. The next day he was x-rayed at Southampton Hospital where it was found he had broken his foot. So much for what adrenaline can do for you.

C. E. T. valued the boot they had placed on his car at $250. If the value of the boot had been one penny less than $250, the criminal charge for breaking it would have been a misdemeanor. At $250, though, the charge becomes a felony. With a felony you get a police record. With a felony you get jail time. So $250 it was. Off they went after the former president of the Sag Harbor Chamber of Commerce, the final outcome of which has been described above.

I was curious about this $250 value of the boot. Early on in this developing story I phoned the Pit Bull Tire Lock Company in Santa Fe, New Mexico, which is a company that manufactures and sells

South O' the Highway (and North, too)

Is it just us or are you tired of these tell-all books that appear yearly? This year it's the book on Martha Stewart and how she climbed to the top of the heap. Kmart is standing behind her, and on the day that the supermarket tabloid the Globe hit the stands with a blazing headline declaring Martha the Monster with quotes from the book, calls were placed to all stores to yank the copies off their stands. Maybe we should all follow suit. Would you like your life story told inaccurately without your consent?

Paul McCartney will be holding his upcoming wedding out here at his home in Amagansett this June. With an event as big as this you know how far Montauk Highway will be backed up to. We will just have to Let It Be.

It seems that Paul McCartney is not the only person in his family who can appreciate the beautiful outdoors. His talented, designer daughter Stella McCartney has been sharing her natural love for nature with her disgruntled neighbors in London. All she wanted to do was have a natural water shower on the roof so she could... ahh... commune shall we say with nature. Her neighbors have said that they really don't want to see that much of nature. Zoning laws may change. If you've been considering moving to London, we suggest you hurry up and pack.

Caught a really funny and hip movie on cable entitled Just Visiting and who did we see in more than just a cameo appearance? George Plimpton as the head curator of a museum and he was quite amusing. There was no research done for this part, as he did do in writing Paper Lion because his character had to appear intelligent, witty and charming... all traits he already possesses.

If you've got it all and were born into the manor such... then all that's left is Hollywood. Paris Hilton has tested the waters by starring in a scream flick. That doesn't necessarily guarantee that she makes it to the final scene. The movie entitled Nine Lives is a low-budget thriller set in a spooky castle in Scotland. With eight actors and the Nine Lives title we don't see how anyone could make it to the end.

Hamptonite's brothers Wilzig has had their somewhat out of place castle in Bridgehampton for sale for 2 years but that may change. Since Ivan has gone into the music business techno style, he has been making his own family money and is now set on building (oh, dear...) another castle but this time in (phew!) Miami. Miami would be the perfect place for a castle. They could even host those medieval dinners (with wenches, knights and horses) there on nights they aren't having parties themselves.

tire boots. I spoke to a man named Wayne Grant there. He told me that Pit Bull Tire Locks sell for $340, though they have something called a Pit Bull Adjustable Lug Blocker Attachment that sells for $125. Why had C. E. T. valued their broken tire lock at exactly $250, not a penny more, not a penny less?

On the Internet I looked at a product sold by a competitor of theirs, AW Direct. Five pounds heavier than the $340 Pit Bull lock, their tire boot cost $377.95.

"What tire lock sells for $250?" I asked Mr. Grant.

"I'm not sure," he said. "But I've seen one for less than ours at our annual trade show. But it wasn't made of tempered steel. And I don't remember the price or who makes it. But you might try Rhino, though I don't have their phone number or address."

On the Internet, Rhino is a record label. I gave up. Perhaps C. E. T. uses Pit Bull tire locks, but because this one was used, they valued it at $250. An arbitrary amount. Interesting.

There is one lot in Southampton, in front of the IGA, that uses C. E. T. and there are four in East Hampton. I know something about two of those four lots in East Hampton.

One is behind the Bank of New York on Main Street and it is owned by the bank. The vice president of the bank, Ron Cyr, was approached by C. E. T. to run their little money making service there and Cyr called East Hampton Village and offered to rent the whole lot to the Village for $1 a year. They were in the banking business, not the parking lot business. The village declined. According to Larry Cantwell, the village administrator, the village was willing to take it if the bank would agree to allow 2-hour parking, which is what the village allows in all their other lots. They wanted parking in this lot to conform to their standard. But the bank would only agree to it if it was 30-minute parking. So the deal fell through. Seems like there might be a compromise here. Anyway, Cyr says the offer still stands.

Ben Krupinski, the well-known builder, bought the property where the Windmill Deli is located, including the parking lot behind it. Prior to this purchase, the village did lease the lot for $1 a year. Krupinski declined to renew the lease. Instead he hired C. E. T. and this is where the run-in with Andrew Baker took place. Everyone hates this car booting system. Your car is held hostage. You pay out the money Jesse James style. I hope Baker sues them because of his broken foot.

"Charging $150 or even $200 is not unusual for the removal of the boot," Mr. Grant told me. "But mostly it is used by municipalities where they find a car that's owned by somebody who hasn't paid their parking tickets. I have a friend that happened to in Cooperstown, New York. She had $900 worth of parking tickets. They booted her car. Charged her $200 above the cost of the fine to get it off."

"Is booting cars something done by many villages and towns?" I asked.

"Quite a few," he said. "But some towns do not allow booting companies to operate. They have laws against them."

"On public property or private property?"

"Either one."

Not East Hampton and not Southampton. Can somebody explain this?

Into the situation comes Citarella, the popular food store that is based in Manhattan and which, two years ago, opened a branch in Water Mill. Citarella is leasing from Mr. Krupinski the space where the Windmill Deli is now. In a month they will open in East Hampton. Talk about stress. There are about six parking spaces on the street. Other than that, people are going to want to park in the lot behind the store. They will be racing around inside the store, fighting with each other to get through the checkout before their cars get booted. Imagine that.

Apparently, this thought occurred to Mr.

"The Potatoes"

If Things Had Taken A Different Turn Years Ago, You'd Be Going Out To East Potato

By Dan Rattiner

During the past year, the state of Maine has been forced to change the name of many of its towns, villages, lakes and streams. It's been a virtual revolution of name changing and it has caused confusion among mapmakers, village mayors, congressmen and, of course, the citizens of that state.

The problem arose about ten years ago when this country was in the throes of "politically correct" thinking. Some American Indians, who were now asking to be called Native Americans, went to congress and said that the word "squaw" was offensive to them, as was "warpath," "red men" and, of course, "Indian" itself, which came from Christopher Columbus' mistaken belief that he had sailed halfway around the world and was talking to the residents of India.

The federal government responded to these objections by setting up a committee (of course) to study these and other names objected to by blacks, Chinese, Italians, Mexicans, Japanese and other minority groups. Out of this came laws requiring governments to meet with minorities and get objectionable names changed to something agreeable to all those concerned.

"Squaw," according to the heads of some, but not all native American tribes, was a derogatory word. In some Indian languages, it was even an obscenity. (In other Indian languages, it meant something nice.) Of course it would be changed, said the federal government. Of course it would be changed said the governor of Maine, among many other governors.

We could have an East Gucci and a Gucci Beach and a Gucci Harbor. People would say, "I'm heading out to the Guccis for the weekend."

Maine, it turns out, has more places named "Squaw" than any other state in America. This was a huge undertaking. And, as it turned out, it was not pretty. In Piscataquis County alone there is Big Squaw Township, Little Squaw Township, Squaw Brook, Middle Squaw Brook, Squaw Point, Little Squaw Brook, Squaw Bay, Little Squaw Pond and Big Squaw Pond. And that is just one county.

Maine residents at first refused to change these names. It was pointed out that on the Penobscot Indian Reservation there is a White Squaw Island, which, residents said, the Penobscots told them had been named that by an Indian woman. The Penobscots, denying this, demanded the name of the place be changed to No Name Island. When other weird names were proposed, some of them obviously done to annoy the government —somebody proposed Wildcat Lake knowing there isn't a wildcat in the state — the state decided to simply do what computer people call a "find and replace." They would make a list of every place name in the state of Maine with the word "Squaw" in it and they would replace it with the word "Moose." And that is exactly what they did.

Squaw Mountain is now Moose Mountain,

Little Squaw Township is Little Moose Township and so forth and so on. Signs have gone up. Now the problem is trickling down. The Squaw Mountain Ski Resort has to make a decision, which is, so far, to keep it Squaw Mountain Ski Resort. Also, there were already five different Moose Ponds in the aforementioned Piscataquis County even before they added the three more formerly called Squaw Pond. But it will all get worked out. Though it might take a generation before a fire department, hearing there is a blaze in the woods north of Moose Pond, will figure out where to go.

It has occurred to me, on the other hand, that here on the East End we ought to do a "find and replace" on the word "Hampton." There are Hamptons in many other states besides New York. There are five of them alone, all resort towns, in New Hampshire. There are others in Virginia, Florida, California and, of course, all over England. We deserve better. We are a unique place in the world. We should have a unique name.

I have been mentioning this to a number of friends who have suggested "replacement" names. One is Gucci. We could have an East Gucci and a Gucci Beach and a Gucci Harbor. People would say "I'm heading out to the Guccis for the weekend." Real Estate prices, already through the roof, would go out of the solar system.

Another suggestion was "Hammacher Schlemmer." Take a trip to Hammacher Schlemmer Bays instead of Hampton Bays. I'm not sure this works, though people would surely remember it.

But I think we should find a more traditional, more back-to-the-earth name. "Moose" does that. In fact, we could be the Mooses, even though mooseless, just to screw it all up even further.

Or "fish." East Fish, Southfish. People have been fishing out here for three hundred years.

The problem with "Fish," though, is that it doesn't work well with someone being up in a Manhattan penthouse saying they would be driving out to the Fishes. Bad idea. Sounds like a plan with cement shoes.

What does work is "potato." We've also been harvesting them for three hundred years. East Potato. Bridge Potato. And there is a precedent to it. The Village of Sagaponack was named after the Indian word "sag" which means "ground nut" or potato to us. This also explains Sag Harbor.

"I'm heading out to the Potatoes for the weekend," the Manhattanite says.

"French fried or baked?" would easily identify an outsider trying to pretend he was a Hamptonite. •

Krupinski as well. And so he's decided to give C.E.T. the boot and put in valet parking, for Citarella and the East Hampton Gym, which is also in the building.

Perhaps the idea of valet parking has arrived. Valet parking is in effect at town lots in the expensive village of Greenwich, Connecticut. It seems to work there.

I mentioned this plan at Citarella to the folks who run the Sagg General Store.

"We've already heard about it," Bob Baugh, one of the owners, told me. "And we're going to offer it here at our store, too, but with a free lube job while you shop."

Sometimes I visit my daughter Maya in San Francisco. Up in Little Italy where she used to live, parking was tight, but there were private lots you could park in where they charged a few dollars an hour. You knew in advance what you were getting into. Just like you do at any lot. But I remember one lot, on Grand Street, that consisted of a small triangle of land that could accommodate about nine cars. There were signs up about the parking fees. But no attendant. Just a metal box with a slot in the top.

"Parking here is $4 an hour. It's the honor system. Please put the money in the box. We pick up once at the end of the day. Thanks. And have a nice day."

Private parking in the Hamptons, if that is where we are heading, should be by the hour. Pay the attendant, do it the up-front way. Or do valet parking. The C. E. T. way is sleazy, frightening, dishonorable and harmful to this community. Village Hall should outlaw car booters. Until they do, readers should seriously consider not doing business with lot owners who bring car booting here. •

The Greatest

The City, With Two Front Teeth Missing, Has An Identity Crisis

By Dan Rattiner

There is something seriously wrong with New York City now. It looks like somebody with a couple of teeth missing. Remember Muhammad Ali in his prime? Probably the greatest boxer in the world. Imagine him with two front teeth missing.

One could argue that those who come after us, those who won't have seen the films or the photos of the skyline of New York before September 11, won't notice anything wrong. And those who never liked the Twin Towers in the first place — bad design, too big, too cold — won't think much of what I am talking about, but then, then, there is the scheme of things.

Almost all adults today, raised anywhere in the world, consider New York City the greatest city on the planet. Not by some order of magnitude, but in a class by itself. There are other cities, pretty good ones, Tokyo, Hong Kong and so forth, but they are the also-rans, the people that Muhammad Ali beat. The baton was handed to us by London at the end of the nineteenth century, a city exhausted from trying to keep its empire together. And we had received it and, as America moved into her prime, took the leadership role in the world beyond anyone's wildest dreams.

We were challenged. Berlin challenged us and was destroyed. Moscow challenged us and collapsed. Tokyo challenged us and faded. We have been, since 1900, right up until the present day, even including September 11, the center of the world. But now we've had two front teeth knocked out.

This is a very weird feeling, for me, anyway. I have spent my entire life growing up in and around New York City. I have lived in it, commuted to it, been a kid in a suburb of it, settled in the resort that is most closely connected with it. I have traveled all over the world. I have been to all the above cities mentioned and many more. The whole time I have been away I have — and this is a metaphor many people are said to have — a golden cord that connects me to this place. I am part of the Muhammad Ali that goes to a city in another part of the world where I meet with people who are part of Sonny Liston. Or Cleveland Williams. Or George Chuvolo, all of whom Ali knocked out.

I have developed a superiority complex, which would be a bad thing except that by all observable data, it is well earned. We are the literary and artistic capitol of the world. We are the financial capital of the world. We are the art and fashion capital of the world. We have the Statue of Liberty, the Empire State Building, Rockefeller Center, Broadway, the United Nations, the Twin Towers, Fifth Avenue, the Chrysler Building and a vibrancy and life that is unparalleled, all created by a bunch of mutts, people who came here with hopes and dreams from somewhere else and whose forbears spoke maybe five hundred different languages before they agreed that English at least ought to be one of them.

Wow. Look what we've done in New York. Then,

many of the descendants of these people have left town and gone off to develop Cleveland or Toronto or somewhere. Chicago's a pretty big one now. And Los Angeles.

Well, it seems to me, now that I look at what's happened downtown, maybe we ought to take stock of things. I am talking about our view of ourselves. Regardless of our continued successes, do we really want to continue to shoulder this great burden – being the greatest city in the world?

In some ways, regardless of what we do at the Twin Tower site, locations in the rest of the world are, in various fields, gaining on us. We used to have the largest population in the world. Now we rank about tenth. The manufacturing center of the world is now Hong Kong with Shanghai not far behind. We used to build the tallest buildings in the world. Now the tallest buildings in the world are in Malaysia, and, domestically, Chicago. Chicago is gaining on us as the city with the largest collection of very, very tall buildings. And soon, we may no longer even be the largest city in the United States in terms of population. Los Angeles may soon have that title. And Los Angeles has, in the last quarter of the past century, surpassed New York as the entertainment capital of the world.

And let's face it, architecturally, without the Twin Towers, our skyline looks old. What dominates it now are the Empire State Building and the Chrysler Building, both seventy years old. Even little cities, like Miami or even Philadelphia, for God sake, look retro and modern by comparison.

I think we are really faced with an emotional decision here. We are certainly considering building something smaller at Ground Zero than was there before. And we have no great plans to build anything new and tall anywhere else. Donald Trump's West Side tower has been rebuffed. Trump, for awhile, was trying to build a 120-story building in Chicago with his name on it. I mean, if you can make it here you can make it anywhere, but if they no longer want you to make it here, then it's time to go somewhere else.

Maybe we ought to, well, share. With our old attitude, many people consider us insufferable anyway. Maybe we ought to encourage other cities to join us as equals. We could start with the cute little ones. Cute is in nowadays, and little and cute wouldn't threaten us psychologically, so this might be a good place to start. Think of Boston, San Francisco and Seattle, all cute, all culturally hip. From there we could go on to encourage other big cities. Go Dallas Go. We in New York are PROUD of what they are building in Chicago. Los Angeles with fifteen million people, imagine that?

If we took this attitude, in some ways, we could settle in as the keeper of the flame, much as Paris is doing. There's pride in that, joy and delight too. The Eiffel Tower, the Louvre, Monmartre, the Left Bank, Notre Dame. Paris was and still is the City of Light. It won't change.

Do I think it's possible the people of New York City could go this route? Not at all. Snowball in hell. The twentieth century belonged to New York City and the twenty-first century is going to belong to New York City and on and on until somebody takes it away from us. But no crackpot, avenging something the crusaders did in the thirteenth century, is going to be the one who does it. •

Buy Land In Montauk

The Gold Cup Speed Boat Race And The U.S. Navy Maneuvers In Montauk

By Dan Rattiner

Today when the economy falters, those in charge in Washington have all sorts of switches and levers they can manipulate — lower taxes, rebates, lower interest rates, oil stockpile levels — to steady the ship of state and start a new round of growth. In 1929, however, when the Crash came and sank us into the Great Depression, the government didn't know what to do. There weren't even any braking mechanisms in the stock market. The collapse began, and it just kept on going. Some stockbrokers on Wall Street became so distraught they committed suicide.

Under these circumstances, something happened in Montauk that was so desperate and so illegal it led to a great scandal, and the resignation of a member of the Pr[illegible]. It is a long forgott[illegible] fascinating one n[illegible].

In 1925, in boom times, a developer named Carl Fisher b[illegible]ght Mo[illegible] from Amagansett to the lighthous[illegible] order to build a resort city on it. Ten years earlier, Fisher had bought an uninhabited island off Miami and transformed it into Miami Beach. Montauk, in acreage, was about the same size as Miami Beach. The wealthy would go to Miami Beach in the winter and Montauk in the summer.

By the fall of 1929, Fisher had put in all the streets and all the pink sidewalks we see in downtown Montauk today. He built a surf club and boardwalk, a small downtown complete with post office, movie theater and churches, the Montauk Manor, the Montauk Yacht Club and the polo field out where Indian Field Ranch is today. About 6,000 workers were in Montauk digging and building in the late 1920s. He built homes for them in Shepherd's Neck. Fisher built an indoor tennis pavilion (still standing next to the Montauk Firehouse), he built a winding road which served as a racetrack — Fairview Avenue — and he built the big white seven-story skyscraper downtown. Fisher lived in the penthouse there. And he often entertained guests, well-known millionaires in the auto industry with names like Firestone, Champion and Oldfield, taking them out on the balcony of his penthouse late at night to show them where he intended to build other skyscrapers.

> Powering the boats were engines from airplanes. Flags and pennants were everywhere, the speedboats were painted up in gay colors. It was quite a spectacle.

"Buy land," he told them. "It will never be so cheap again."

Then Black Monday hit the stock market and prices of everything around the country collapsed. Just about anybody with money invested there would lose everything.

It takes awhile, however, for the full scope of such a thing to settle in. And meanwhile, because of Fisher's connection with the auto industry — he had made his first millions with a patented process for building sealed headlights for cars — something happened that gave Fisher and his people in Montauk hope. Victor Kliesrath won the Gold Cup.

At the time of the great Crash, Fisher was fifty-five years old. In his youth he had been a race car driver — he held the speed record for a measured mile for awhile — and so besides people in the auto manufacturing industry, he also knew racing car drivers. One of these people [illegible] witting several dozen competitors. [illegible] the winner, he had the right to choose where it would take place the following year. Kliesrath had bought and built in Montauk at the urging of Carl Fisher. And so, he chose Lake Montauk. On August 31, 1929, it was announced that the United States Gold Cup Speedboat Race would take place in August of 1930 at Lake Montauk.Ninety days after this announcement the stock market crashed.

In the early spring of 1930, with one company after another declaring bankruptcy, Carl Fisher and his crew, still in Montauk, thought that maybe holding the Gold Cup at Montauk would turn things around.

In Detroit, nearly 100,000 fans had lined the shores of Lake Michigan to watch this event. The boats, traveling at these high speeds, roared through the water sending up huge rooster tails of water behind them. Powering the boats were engines from airplanes. Flags and pennants were everywhere, the speedboats were painted up in gay colors. It was quite a spectacle.

Would anyone come to Montauk? It was a long, lonely trip out to the eastern end of Long Island, and though much of it had already been built, much remained to be done. Such an event, if done right, could prime the pump of the local economy, maybe even the national economy. It could re-invigorate Fisher's Montauk project which was, when you came down to it, about selling land, and which, by the spring of 1930, had ground to a halt.

Fisher and his men decided that though the Gold Cup Race was a considerable attraction, it might not be enough. What if they could add a SECOND attraction to go on at the same time in Montauk? This could send it over the top.

Someone remembered that the United States Navy conducted maneuvers off Newport, Rhode Island, every August. The entire fleet was in attendance. Battleships, cruisers, destroyers, gunboats, freighters. About 20,000 Naval officers and men manned these ships. There were more than 300 of them. What if the Navy could be persuaded to hold their maneuvers off Montauk rather than Newport in August 1930? What if all these Naval officers came ashore to join the crowd watching the race? What if the ships could dock and the public could board them and look around? This was the second event Fisher was looking for. He would have to find out who made the decision about where to hold the maneuvers. Where there was a will, there was a way.

The 1930 Gold Cup race was held in Lake Montauk on schedule, with 28 boats vying for the cup. Victor Kliesrath finished fourth, and so the race would not be held in Lake Montauk in 1931. After the turnout, however, it seemed likely that even if Kliesrath had won, the race would not be held in Lake Montauk in 1931.

The two-day event drew about 500 hearty speedboat racing fans, a number which just about matched the total of the those conducting the race — the officials, the mechanics and pit crew members, the race drivers, the promoters and the press — and that was it. As for the naval vessels, the Chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, Charles Francis Adams, did order that the maneuvers take place off Montauk, but that instruction did not sit well with the Naval officers on board the ships, and so they held their maneuvers ten miles off, well beyond the horizon, and too far out for the officers to come to shore even if they had wanted to.

Perhaps the whole debacle would have passed without further notice, except for the fact that Chairman Adams had ordered four Navy dirigibles to fly over Lake Montauk while the race was underway, with huge signs on their sides reading BUY LAND IN MONTAUK. Supposedly those signs would have been read by half a million people. In the event, the signs were read by about a thousand people, and several newspapermen wondered what it was about.

It turned out Chairman Adams had ordered military aircraft to be used for private commercial purposes for a very good reason. Fisher, in order to lure Adams to Montauk, had offered the Chairman options on several dozen building parcels. If they got sold it would make Chairman Adams a very rich man. In the end, with the Adams' behavior being touted as a national scandal by the Democrats, Republican President Herbert Hoover ordered him to resign.

Two years later, Franklin Delano Roosevelt defeated Herbert Hoover and the long, sustained fight to bring the country out of her depression began. A single speedboat race was far from enough. It would take the efforts of nearly ten years, and even then only a world war would shake America out of her doldrums. •

Long Island's Computer Associates Develops Revolutionary Accounting Procedures

By Dan Rattiner

Long Island was, for many years, a one company town. The company was Grumman, the maker of the moon lander, a wide variety of fighter planes and numerous training and spy planes. Grumman was by far the largest employer on Long Island, and when the astronauts landed on the moon and drove around in a little cart made just west of Riverhead, here on Long Island people popped champagne corks.

Grumman no longer does business here on Long Island. When they lost their main fighter plane contract with the Navy, they merged with Northrop Aerospace and moved away to Texas. Now the largest firm on Long Island, by a long shot, is Computer Associates, this nation's second largest software firm, which, seeing the vacuum that the loss of Grumman created among the well-educated upper middle class workers, built its headquarters right on the Long Island Expressway at Islandia.

One can almost root for Computer Associates the way one rooted for Grumman. Computer hardware and software are the wave of the future. And Charles Wang, the founder and driving force of the company, has displayed an enlightened approach to the community. With a partner, he bought the Islanders hockey team, the only major professional sports team on Long Island, which had been foundering for many years, and turned it from a shabby also-ran to a Stanley Cup contender.

Wang has also taken a considerable interest in Oyster Bay, buying much of the downtown and waterfront and setting out to rebuild and restore it.

Though Computer Associates has grown dramatically over the last decade, recently its had its ups and downs, apparently because it zigged a few times when it should have zagged. A minority stockholder tried to force Wang out last year but failed. And new accounting techniques put in place have been described by many as not telling you much about whether CA is doing well or badly.

Computer Associates has... had its ups and downs, apparently because it zigged a few times when it should have zagged.

"Really, the only thing an investor can go on at Computer Associates is cash flow," one Wall Street type recently wrote. "You can see cash in and cash out. That's something, anyway. But everything else is just kind of fuzzy."

I was thinking about this while reading the business section of The New York Times last Friday morning. The news was about Enron and the accounting firm of Arthur Anderson, about Xerox and the accounting firm of KPMG. An energy regulator from California had announced the Enron stock went from 100 to 290 during the last quarter of 2000 largely because Enron created small, make-believe companies and pretended that they were bidding up the price of energy to astronomic levels in California. I was in California at the time. There were brownouts and blackouts. It was awful. The governor had tampered with the normal market system, empowering a group of state bureaucrats, who knew nothing about energy, to negotiate the price at which oil would get sold to power plants in California. It was a disaster. Enron ate these people for lunch. And until they got it fixed, there was great hardship all over the state as the power plant companies could not buy oil, whose astronomic prices had been artificially inflated by Enron. Brown and blackouts followed.

During this time, the chairman of Enron, Kenneth Lay, was exhorting his employees to buy more Enron stock as a show of confidence in the company. Now it turns out that while exhorting his employees, he was unloading more than $70 million of his personal shares, sometimes selling them on the same day he was urging others to buy. This fact was only disclosed Friday because that's when the SEC rules said you had to disclose it. The SEC is now proposing that when officers of a company buy or sell stock, they make it public only a week or two after they do it. That's why it was in the news.

Another interesting article on this business page involved the loaning of cash from a company to an officer of the company without revealing it. There was the case of Bernard J. Ebbers, the chief executive of WorldCom, who quietly borrowed $375 million from the company as WorldCom shares went south. $375 million? Needed it to consolidate some of his wife's shopping bills or something. And the law said he didn't have to reveal it for a year. The SEC wants to change that, too.

Also on the business page was a reproduction of the suicide note that a vice president of Enron wrote before putting a gun in his mouth last fall. It was addressed to his wife.

"I am so sorry for this," he wrote. "I feel I just can't go on. I have always tried to do the right thing but where there once was great pride now it's gone. Please try to forgive me."

And then there was Xerox. Apparently, the executives of the company wanted to use about $200 million dollars in revenue that hadn't happened yet to polish the image of the current year, 1999, to show they were a bigger company than they really were. The stock advanced. At the time the plan moved forward, the man in charge of auditing Xerox for their accounting firm, KPMG, vigorously objected. Xerox did an end run around him, urging his bosses to "reassign" him. They did. The SEC was fining Xerox $10 million dollars for this bit of business, and the years of 1997, 1998 and 1999 would be "restated," showing lower profits.

Wading through all this — the president of the National Society of Accountants resigned for profiting on insider information — I got to thinking that maybe Computer Associates is onto something.

Like Grumman before them — we had been so proud of them — maybe Computer Associates had stumbled upon something revolutionary, in this case the accounting technique of the future. Just count how much money came in that day. Check the cash register. A few bucks here, a few bucks there. Then pay the bills, and if there was any money left over, divide it up among the stockholders.

We're with you, Computer Associates.

All this made me think of a joke.

An important member of an accounting firm is applying for a job with a major American corporation. It will be a big step up for him. He is sitting across from the interviewer.

"Well, you certainly have had considerable experience," the interviewer says, "and a good education. The Wharton School of Business. Harvard Law. You are very well qualified. But I wonder how good you are with some of the more mundane tasks."

"Try me," the applicant says.

"How much is two and two?"

"What kind of question is that? Surely you can see I would know the answer to that question."

"How much is two and two?"

"How much does your firm want it to be?"

"You're hired." •

Who's Here:

Ned Dougherty

Author

By John Capone

Ned Dougherty died — in 1984. Yet, here it is March, 2002, a full year since the publication of his book Fast Lane to Heaven: Celestial Encounters That Changed My Life and he is sitting with me in the Sip and Soda in Southampton ordering oatmeal and decaf tea (decaffeinated because near-death experiencers, or NDE'ers often suffer from chemical sensitivity, he later tells me).

Dougherty walks around with constant déjà vu, haunted by a familiarity in places he has never been before in his life. He's written about his visions of the future, and will sometimes talk about the future in the past tense. This habit can be disconcerting to the uninitiated. In the finest traditions of Sauls who turned into Pauls, Dougherty has a tale to tell. It's a tale that goes from Studio 54 to the Hamptons to West Palm Beach to Hollywood to Heaven and just about everywhere in between. He's on his second (maybe third) life in more ways than one. Before embarking on his current path he owned nightclubs in Westhampton Beach and Palm Beach, was heavily involved in real estate and admits that he had a hand in making the Hamptons what they are today.

Dougherty first came to the Hamptons to work as a lifeguard during the summer while attending St. John's University. After spending a few years working on Wall Street, he saw that there was money to be made in real estate and a lifestyle he craved on the East End. He says simply, "I went out into a very materialistic, hedonistic world and I encompassed it fully."

In 1976 he opened Club Marakesh in Westhampton Beach. The rise and fall of the club is now the stuff of local legend. Dougherty tells me, "When Club Marakesh opened, it... drew a lot of very trendy people from the city who wanted to be a part of the Hamptons' scene... It was the beginning of what we see now — our perception of the Hamptons." He talks about the early days of the club with a mix of pride, affection and revulsion.

By the early nineties Marakesh had lost some of its luster. He says that the move of Marakesh's clientele, whom he refers to as "the trendsetters, the movers and shakers," further east to all the land that was available in Bridgehampton, Wainscott and Sagaponack lead to the demise of the club. The end for Marakesh came in May of 1996, just as the season was kicking into high gear, in the form of what was described as a racially motivated assault. Shane Daniels, who is black, was attacked and beaten by white assailants as he left the club. Not long after the incident the club was closed.

When the property was sold in a foreclosure sale in 1999, Dougherty lost millions. "Ultimately Marakesh closed in tragedy," Dougherty acknowledges, but with the gleam returning to his eyes he adds, "If I could have levitated that building out of Westhampton and brought it down in the middle of Bridgehampton, it would still be probably the greatest nightclub in the Hamptons, but I wouldn't be a part of it." Which brings us to the second life of Ned Dougherty.

For eight minutes he did not breathe. For eight minutes he had no pulse. Then he came back. He came back with a head full of ideas that he just couldn't make sense of...

At about 10:30 p.m. on July 2, 1984, at the age of 37, in respiratory and cardiac arrest, Ned Dougherty dropped onto the pavement outside Club Marakesh and was rushed to the hospital. In the ambulance he "coded" for a period of eight minutes. For eight minutes he did not breathe. For eight minutes he had no pulse. Then he came back. He came back with a head full of ideas that he just couldn't make sense of and couldn't shrug off.

During that eight minutes he had the most intense and profound part of his near death experience (NDE). In his book, Dougherty describes how he saw his body lying in the ambulance and watched the EMTs working on his apparently lifeless form. He tells me the experience started there, took him to a place outside time and space as we know it, and brought him back changed in ways he could not have imagined.

"I was certainly agnostic, perhaps even an atheist. I was living in that fast lane, a part of that whole scene, drinking and using cocaine. My reality was party every day, live for the moment, when life is over that's it: the party's over. There's nothing else. Now all of a sudden my perception of reality was turned upside down. I got out of the hospital and was back in my physical body. I was back in this reality, but I'd had this profound experience, more real than reality that we're in right now, and I couldn't put it out of my mind... It's the ineffable. It's difficult to describe," he says with his typical penchant for understatement He tries to do what he has been doing for over fifteen years — put ideas that are almost too big for words into words

After his release from the hospital, Dougherty struggled mightily to deal with the experience. He tells me that when he was home in Westhampton recovering he would lie on a "chaise lounge outside next to my pool. I would pick up water out of the pool, let it trickle out of my hand and be absolutely mesmerized by a drop of water. I'd sit and stare at the leaves and plants and flowers in my garden, and I could actually see this energy and light in all living things. At night I used to sit out there under the stars and just dream about going home."

He couldn't ignore what happened and couldn't make sense of it. His behavior became what he describes as "manic... like Richard Dreyfuss in Close Encounters of the Third Kind when he was building that mountain."

One sunny afternoon after the experience, Dougherty got up the courage to go back to Marakesh and see the place where it had all started.

"I walked down this alleyway on the side of the club where my body had dropped that night. I just walked there and looked down at that spot." He was in the shopping cove on the side of Marakesh, and remembers that when he was standing there entranced by the sidewalk he heard a couple of women behind him complaining about the prices in the stores. He could hear children ordering ice cream and all the other sounds accompanying a busy July day on Main Street. But everything faded to the background.

"Amidst all this I was just standing there staring down at that spot, and I heard very audibly in my ear this voice. It was — I call her the Lady of Light — and she said, 'You are going to write a book about what you experienced and this book will become the source of inspiration for people in search of their true spiritual nature.' It was the same message I heard in the ambulance when I was clinically dead and had that experience, but now the experience was over. I'm out of the hospital. There I am standing in this alleyway and I'm hearing voices." Dougherty worried that he might be going crazy.

He knew that he had to do something about what was going on his head, but he didn't know what. The doctors couldn't even tell him why he died, and he was afraid to share his experience with anyone. Then, in that alleyway, he heard voices. It was then that he first felt drawn to visit Duke University Medical Center. He tells me that one of the characteristics of NDE'ers is "to go with this inspiration that you get that's almost telepathic from the other side sending you in a certain direction in your life." Dougherty called Duke University and flew there the next day.

He says that he went through every test that they had at Duke, and even asked for and was given a psychiatric evaluation. "It was pretty funny dealing with the psychiatrists," he says, "because at that time I could read their minds." I wonder if he can read my mind. I look into his sharp blue eyes and wonder if he knows that I'm wondering.

The doctors at Duke could make no primary diagnosis, but it was suggested that he come back for more tests. When he went back in September to take part in a cardiovascular rehab program another patient suggested to Dougherty that he go see a Dr. Rao, the head of parapsychological research at the Rhine Foundation near Duke.

It was at the Rhine Institute that Dougherty found some of the answers he was looking for. He met with Dr. Rao and after he finished telling him his story, Dr. Rao looked at him and said, 'The first thing I want you to know is you're not going crazy. What you've had is called a near death experience." Relieved to hear someone tell him that he wasn't crazy, Dougherty embraced Dr. Rao's theories.

In 1994 Dougherty was drawn to Our Lady of the Island shrine in Eastport, a 70-acre wooded shrine up in the hills. At the shrine there is a vista where a statue stands atop a 300-ton boulder and looks out over the Atlantic Ocean. "During [the NDE] I looked from that point out over that scene, and for years didn't know where the scene was from until I went there. Much of my journey was being drawn there. It was there that I started getting more messages, inspirations about what I was supposed to do."

At this time, in what he calls a "quickening," because of the way his life seemed to speed up, he describes "a combination of an emotional, spiritual and even intellectual awareness," and he began to make use of the information he had stored up from the NDE. "To use that same analogy of the computer, back then, let's say the eighties, in a computer you had programs and information stored; now all of a sudden the internet comes along and you're now connected to another realm of information. Well, what NDE experiencers are attuned to is what I would call the spiritual internet." Part of the reason for the quickening was that things Dougherty had been shown in visions began to happen. In order for him to validate his experience in his own mind he says, "these future things that I was shown in my life as well geophysical and geopolitical things had to start happening. Once they did that confirmed for me the reality of what I experienced."

He talks about much of what he was shown in a section of Fast Lane to Heaven titled "The Future." One predication in particular has garnered a great deal of attention in the last six months. On Page 252 Dougherty writes, "A major terrorist attack may befall New York City or Washington D.C., severely impacting the way we live in the United States." When asked what made him write that, he says, "All of these future visions come from the part of my experience where I was shown the future of the world. I was in this heavenly celestial room and [The Lady of Light] was pointing to a large globe. As she spoke she showed me these flash points of light breaking out all over the Middle East. At the same time I'm seeing these visions like newsreels of future events. That sentence is the result of one particular vivid memory I had. I saw myself standing on the street-corner in New York City watching buildings topple and people running by me. When September 11 happened, I turned on the TV and watched what was happening and was just as shocked as everyone else to see those planes hit the buildings. It wasn't until I was watching a certain scene on the TV of the people running when the buildings collapsed that I knew. I said, 'I was there.'"

What Dougherty says he brought back with him from the brink of death is a belief that people are spiritual and eternal beings. He says he has "that comforting knowledge that when we die we still exist. We exist in a vivid state of consciousness. We're just in a different place," and he wants you to listen to him because he says he's been there, "We're back in the spiritual realm, which is really our true home." •

Sag Harbor Takes Its Robot to Orlando

By Brian Zapin

Nobody expected Sag Harbor's Pierson High School to win the Regional Robotics Competition at Suffolk County Community College last month. But they did. And since the school barred all school trips involving air travel after 9/11, nobody expected them to be going down to Disney World to compete in the championship event, either. But they are.

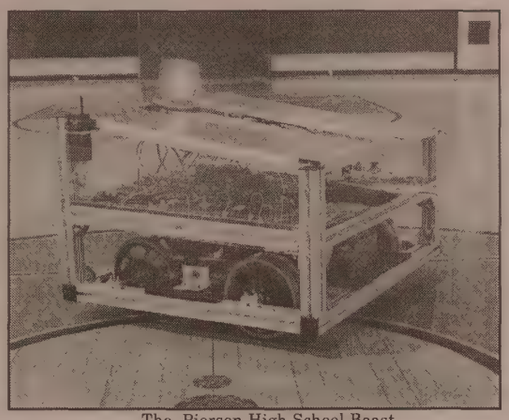
Next week, the students from Pierson High's Robotics team head for Orlando, Florida, to compete in the FIRST. FIRST (For Inspiration and Recognition of Science and Technology) is a program designed to attract children to science and technology by making it fun and intriguing. Pierson was the first Long Island school to join the competitions in 1996. This is not the first time they are eligible to compete in the championship event, but it is the first time they are going to the National Robotics Championship event. Ten of fifteen students on the team are going, and they join more than 290 other teams from across the U.S., Canada, Great Britain and Brazil.

"I kept saying, 'We're going to win this year,'" Mrs. Terrigno said about the regional competitions. "We're going to win because we're not allowed to go to Florida." Mrs. Terrigno and Mr. Kraszewski are teachers at Pierson High School; they helped the robotics team with the building of their robot and their preparations before competitions.

But the decision on whether they could go was not up to the teachers or the students. It was up to the principal and the school board. "If we hadn't won the regionals we would never have been able to go. It's only because we won the regionals that the school lifted the ban on going [to Florida]," says Terrigno.

Worse yet, because they were originally not allowed to go, they had not registered to compete in the nationals on time. Luckily, all regional winners get an extra five days to register for the event.

The championship is being held at Disney's Epcot Center. The school is paying to ship the robot to Orlando, a costly endeavor, and for the bus transportation to and from the competition. Everything else had to be covered by the students either with their own money or through fundraisers.



The Pierson High School Beast

There used to be no criteria for making it to the finals; anybody could enter as long as they registered their team on time. Now, however, there are so many teams competing, with so many trying to join, FIRST had to ration out the years teams could compete in the championship; every team has the same team number every year. Teams with odd numbers can enter in odd years and teams with even numbers can enter in even years.

The event takes place April 25 to April 27; the first day is just practice. The students work on strategy and make sure the robot is functioning properly. The second day is qualifying and the third is elimination. "It's a little like March Madness," Terrigno says excitedly. The winning team goes on to the next match and the losing team is finished for the year.

The competition itself is something like a combination two-on-two soccer/basketball match rolled into one. There are four robots on the field, two robots from separate teams on each half, teamed together randomly without prior notice. Three baskets rest in the center of the field on wheels. The robot teams each try and dunk as many balls in each basket as possible in two minutes time, while also trying to drag the baskets into their respective scoring zones. Each ball, basket and robot is worth points. The winner is determined by the total number of points earned by the end of the match.

Pierson High was ranked fourth in the region before the Suffolk Community College competition, and winning boosted them to number one. "Nobody expected us to win the Regionals," Mrs. Terrigno says. "Nobody expects us to win in Florida. But we'll see. These guys are really talented and really looking forward to going."

The Sheltered Islander By Sally Flynn

Observations of an Islander # 196
The Lawn Ranger

Some people think that birds building their nests signals the beginning of spring. Some think that buds popping up as fast as popcorn signals spring. Some think it's the arrival of tourists. But to me, nothing designates spring has sprung like the sound of lawn mowers.

Has anyone ever stopped to consider the amount of industry that has sprouted up based on the idea that grass is the only suitable covering for your front yard and that it must be kept four inches tall? I know the arguments; it keeps the bugs down, it's attractive. That's it? It keeps the bugs down and looks good. How lame a reason is this to fight the growth of the weed we call grass every week?

Wanna keep bugs down and still have that green carpet look? Do what I did when I was a homeowner, plant moss. I planted a yard full of moss, gorgeous Irish Moss. Little tiny white flowers in the spring, Irish Moss is never more than 1.5 inches high, it's soft and green year round. Maintenance? Take a sharp stick and walk around every spring punching holes in the moss so rain can get in. End of maintenance.

The neighbors had a fit. "It's moss!" they screamed, "you can't plant moss! It'll kill your grass!"

"Yup, killed every blade," I said.

"But don't you want a lush green lawn?" they implored.

"Yes, I have it," I responded, but I was not to be understood. You see I had discovered that the Emperor had no clothes. I had realized that in life, the grass is only greener over the septic tank.

We can clone human beings, but no one can genetically engineer a grass that stops growing at four inches? HAH! I think Sears, John Deere, McCullough all conspire and pay the biotech companies not to create a four inch grass.

Think about how much money America must spend on lawnmowers — the variety of design — push mowers, riding mowers, riding mowers with umbrellas, drink cup holders, portable wet bar, the cost of the gas, space in your garage, clean-up, repair.

Edgers! The most brilliant creation of the lawn industry. A big heavy dangerous machine costing $300 in most cases, that does what? Gives your lawn a sharp edge. Men sweat in the hot sun to put a sharp edge on a lawn. Why? I think Mr. McCullough wasn't making enough money selling lawn mowers, so he convinced people that grass must be controlled and corralled. A good lawn needs constant supervision. The edges can't be allowed to run wild. Grass must come to a dead stop where you tell it to! If you can't sleep without a sharp edge on your lawn, then your edge was never sharp enough to begin with.

In ancient times, man trimmed his lawn with a scythe, for a damn good reason, it was called HARVESTING! The grass was wheat or oat or rye, there was a reason to cut it, it was food!

We even have sod farms. Farms that grow grass, not food, just grass. You BUY dirt and grass. Then you put it in front of your house and go buy fertilizer so it will grow fast. Then you buy a good quality lawn mower that can keep up with frequent use because your fertilized grass is growing like a weed! After you mow it, you have to take the clippings to the dumps. Then you go home and water it with a nutritious additive so it will grow healthy, which means fast, and you can mow it again. Then you have to edge it. Is anyone sensing a pattern or is it just me?

The American lawn industry has us convinced there is no alternative. They don't want you to think about planting moss, or covering your yard with pebbles in a nice Zen effect with maybe a little Shinto shrine, or planting short flowers that cover the whole front yard. Why? Because they don't want you to think that the grass is greener on the other side, that's why.

Just think if there were no lawn maintenance in your life. Why, you'd have extra money to spend. Lots of extra time. Friends would visit you more often. You'd have more time to spend with your family. Relatives would visit and stay a few days since you have the time and money to enjoy them. No more hiding in the garage and using lawn maintenance as an excuse to be alone with your thoughts or hide from the aftermath of a spousal argument or get away from those people by driving your riding mower to the farthest corner of your yard — wait a minute, let me rethink this.

Please disregard the above column, thanx. SF.

Lucky In Love: Mattituck's Love Lane Sweet Shoppe

By Jolie Trueman-Honey

When my stepdaughter Kim was four, she told my husband that when she grew up she wanted to work at a Carvel because everybody who came in was happy. Recently, she graduated from college. Perhaps I should introduce her to Bill Bladykas, who, with his wife, Lauren, owns the Love Lane Sweet Shoppe; he has Kim's ideal job.

And, indeed, that is just how Bladykas, who bought the store in 1996, describes his work. "It's all about happiness," he says. "The kids get a haircut, and then the parents bring them in here for a treat. Nobody walks out of here unhappy."

And why should they? Walking into the store is like a pleasant trip back in time. Hardwood floors and pressed tin ceilings. Stained wood moldings and hand-painted homilies (which dance around the store enumerating reasons to buy someone you love a special little treat). Old fashioned fixtures and a huge old gumball machine. Glass candy counters displaying an assortment of tempting chocolates. And behind those counters a parade of glass canisters filled to the brim with what used to be called "penny candy." (For a moment I entertained the fantasy that the next child walking through the door would be wearing overalls, sporting a blond cowlick, and would say, "Thanks, Pa!" when handed his candy.)

Unquestionably, Bladykas' feelings about the store were a "love at first sight" story if ever there was one. His family had owned a supermarket in Huntington for many years. When they sold it, he tried banking for awhile but just didn't enjoy the corporate atmosphere. Then, one afternoon, he and his wife were day tripping on the North Fork and found themselves walking down Love Lane. Bill struck up a conversation with the Sweet Shoppe's former owner who mentioned that he was thinking of selling the business. After fifteen minutes of negotiating, the deal was closed. It was that simple.

A lot has changed, however, in the last six years. First, Bill and Lauren moved the store to its larger present location from the store that now houses Model Nails. Additionally, while there's enough candy to keep even the most insatiable Sweet Tooth browsing for quite awhile, there's a lot more to keep other shoppers interested: greeting cards (and not just your typical Hallmarks), charming stationery and notes, stuffed animals (Gund and Tyco), pillows and baskets, trivets and flags, Picnic Time wine totes and picnic baskets, coffee, tea, jams, relishes and condiments. And so much more! Bill credits Lauren with finding gift items "that nobody else is carrying." It was their intention to create an atmosphere where people feel comfortable poking around, "and even if you don't buy something, you still enjoy walking through."

Bill Bladykas behind the counter at the Sweet Shoppe

Now for the piece de resistance. Have you heard the rumor about something extraordinary happening at the Love Lane Sweet Shoppe? Well, here's the story. The Sweet Shoppe also carries Godiva chocolates, both boxed and loose. In 1998, Godiva began a Valentine's Day promotion. They purchased a necklace that had belonged to Jacqueline Kennedy Onassis for which they paid $156,000. They inserted a little red card in each box of chocolate wishing the recipient a happy Valentine's Day, and in one box they added a postscript that indicated that the recipient was the winner of this fabulous prize. Remember, one prize–for all of North America. And where was that box of chocolates sold? You guessed it. The Love Lane Sweet Shoppe!

1999 passed without incident. Then, in 2000, lightning struck a second time! Godiva expanded the contest. In addition to the grand prize, they added a few $1,000 necklaces. And a winner of one of those necklaces was a local bank manager, whose box of Godiva chocolates was purchased from the Love Lane Sweet Shoppe.

But Bill Bladykas, a laid-back guy whose lexicon doesn't seem to recognize the word stress (while I was interviewing him, he ran out to get me a cup of coffee and told me to mind the store!) would rather talk about all of Love Lane than just his establishment. He happens to be the president of the Mattituck Chamber of Commerce, an organization selected as the Suffolk Times' 2001 Businesspeople of the Year partly for the restoration of Love Lane which included ripping up the old sidewalks in favor of brick walks and adding old fashioned streetlights. He's very proud of the work they have accomplished on Love Lane and elsewhere in Mattituck and promises more in the future.

Aside from the name (I mean, who could resist taking a stroll down Love Lane?) this is a great spot for tourists. Bill tells me, "Every summer we set aside a day (Saturday, July 13th this year–put it on your calendar) and close the street to traffic. We set up a stage and invite bands to play; we even have a talent show. People enjoy themselves just meandering down the street and enjoying the shops."

Aside from the Sweet Shoppe, Love Lane also boasts the Village Cheese & Gourmet Shop, the Love Lane Gallery, the Gourmet Coffee and Ice Cream Bar and a host of other stores. No doubt about it: Love Lane is a "must see" on your next North Fork foray. And next Valentine's Day? I know where I'm buying my chocolate!

Winemaking At Its Best: Serious Fun

As I mentioned to winemaker Kip Bedell the other day during a conversation about his chosen profession, "I never met a boring winemaker." And anyone lucky enough to count one of these quirky, extraordinarily creative individuals among their friends knows exactly what I mean. Wine, despite being ancient, remains mysterious in many ways, as is well-evidenced after all these centuries during which we still haven't turned its creation into an exact science. And no one knows this better than they that blend and taste and age and watch, for months on end, in dark, cool cellars around the world. Science, yes. But art as well.

Winemaker Roman Roth

Roman Roth, winemaker at Wölffer Estates in Sagaponack since 1992, has created many lovely and memorable wines during his tenure, and Wölffer's 2001 Rosé is no exception. "I make my Rosé very seriously and the result is a lot of fun," said Roman. But don't confuse fun with frivolous. Debunking the "bubblegum" myth that still clings so unfortunately to this wine style, this elegant Rosé is bone dry, beautifully pale coral in color and redolant of ripe tropical fruit. Its surprisingly long finish makes it pair equally well with a casual summer picnic or sophisticated brunch. Made of 45% Merlot and 55% Chardonnay grapes, the Merlot were allowed to stay twelve hours on the skins to create that lovely color and lush mouthfeel pleasantly surprising in this light-bodied wine. Malolactic fermentation, a second fermentation often employed by winemakers to decrease acidity, was intentionally avoided to keep the tannins lively. The result is a delight.

Pair this wine with poultry, salmon, marinated meats and soft cheese. It will be officially released this Saturday, April 20, at the winery in Sagaponack and will retail for $11 a bottle.

Remember when Long Island was synonymous with roast duckling? Well, John Ross is keeping that tradition alive and well at his Rotisserie and Smokehouse in Southold. With one day's notice, John will prepare a whole, roasted duck, boned, quartered and garnished with dried apricots, accompanied by braised red cabbage, wild rice, and, best of all, a sweet and sour reduction sauce made from carmelized brown sugar, red wine vinegar, cloves, cinnamon, orange, lemon and duck stock. On a recent evening, I paired this takeout dinner with Corey Creek Vineyard's 2000 Gewürztraminer. The results were magical. The wine – to be released at the winery May 1 – has a heady honeysuckle and wild strawberry nose that seduced immediately upon uncorking. Very dry and pleasantly assertive with hints of pear, apple and lychee, it was a perfect match for the hearty game and spice-infused sauce. The wine, which will retail for $13 at Corey Creek, was made by winemaker Eric Fry of Lenz Winery. Gewürztraminer, a favorite of Fry's, is clearly one of his signature wines as evidenced by this splendid example. Cheers.

Make-A-Wish, Make A Difference

"If you could have one wish, what would it be?" That simple question is posed by volunteers from the Make-A-Wish Foundation to thousands of terminally ill children every year. It is a small thing in the face of what these children are going through, but it can mean all the difference in the world. It can mean hours and days of joy, an opportunity for hope, the chance to enjoy a small respite from the doctors' needles and tests, the chance to be a kid.

Some wishes are small; a North Carolina girl wanted letters to open everyday, so the volunteers found her pen pals. Other wishes are more complex; one teenage girl wanted to visit the Holy Land, and she did. The range of wishes is as diverse as the children who make them, but the Make-A-Wish volunteers do everything in their power to make those dreams come true.

The Make-A-Wish Foundation began when a four year-old, Christopher Greicius, wanted to be an Arizona state trooper. It was 1977, he was suffering from cancer and Tommy Austin, a U.S. Customs special agent, found him lying on his couch one day when he came home from work. Christopher was the son of one of Austin's wife's friends and when Austin learned of Christopher's condition – and his dream of being a policeman – he decided to make a difference.

When Christopher was seven his condition worsened and Austin sprang into action. There was little that doctors could do, but there was something that would make Christopher happy. Austin arranged to have Christopher flown over Phoenix in a helicopter and met by four motorcycles and three squad cars when they landed. Christopher got the chance to drive a squad car while seated on an officer's lap and he was presented with his own custom-made uniform and helmet. He was then deputized as an officer. Two days later he was hospitalized, the uniform hung over his hospital bed, and three days after that he died. He was buried in his uniform and given a police funeral with full honors.

The story is at once tragic and hopeful and it was how the non-profit organization began. Over the past twenty years Make-A-Wish has given a seven year-old girl the chance to meet the President, a nine year-old boy the opportunity to throw out the first pitch at a Pirates baseball game and a sixteen year-old boy the chance to meet Princess Diana. And there have been thousands of other wishes granted.

Any child between the ages of two and a half and eighteen, who is suffering from a terminal illness is eligible to have a wish granted. The process is unique in each instance and can be initiated by the child, the child's family or the child's doctor. Once the child's doctor has determined that the child is eligible for the program, volunteers from Make-A-Wish will visit the child and ask, "If you could have one wish, what would it be?" From there it is up to the limits of the child's imagination to determine what his/her hope or dream is.

The Make-A-Wish foundation is active around the world and here on Long Island the Suffolk chapter of the organization will grant its 1000th wish this year. It is a remarkable accomplishment and it should make us pause and consider the difference that has been made in the lives of kids here on the East End. And it should also make us consider how much more there is to be done.

The Make-A-Wish Foundation needs help to continue making a difference in the lives of kids whose wishes are as simple as a shopping spree at the mall or a trip to Disney Land. There are a number of ways that people can help make wishes come true. The Suffolk chapter, as well as other chapters, is currently looking for volunteers, the people who make wishes come true. There are any number of areas that volunteers can help out in, everything from wish granting to raising funds and event planning to marketing and outreach. And it is an opportunity to both give and receive. (www.wish.org) As one volunteer said, "Working with Make-A-Wish really gives me hope in the human condition."

For those wishing to make a donation to the organization – and 90% of your donation will go directly to the fulfillment of a child's wish – there are a number of ways to give. In addition to monetary donations by individuals and organizations, the foundation accepts frequent flier miles and hotel loyalty points. With a goal of granting every child's wish, the Make-A-Wish Foundation will accept all the help it can get, and any donation carries with it more than a dollar value for the difference in a child's life.

For the children who Make-A-Wish helps there is little time, but there are hopes and dreams that can be fulfilled. What may seem like a few brief moments to us, can make all the difference to them.

If you could have one wish, what would it be?

–J.M.

Shop 'til You Drop...With Maria Tennariello

Starting out in Westhampton Beach this week, I just had to stop into French Pink on Main Street to see what all the fuss was about. Aha! The entire store is on sale this month (April), with at least 50% off everything including leather bags, leather and suede scarves, mink scarves, all jewelry (including Me & Ro), as well as last seasons bathing suits, etc. Also, the "spring preview" includes Mother's Day merchandise. Caroline and Corrie want to make room for all their new spring/summer merchandise, hence the amazing price drop...So what do you think I did? Yep, I purchased so much; I could hardly carry it to my car. So get going and stock up with some great deals. Don't forget, French Pink is only open on weekends until May...

Morgansen's is doing it again. Located on County Road 39 in Southampton they are auctioning off the contents of an East Hampton and Manhattan estate furnishings and more. This is all going on this Saturday, April 20 at 11 a.m. with a 9 to 11 a.m. preview.

Looking for something really different in home furnishings. Look and love what you see at Aesthetics Home Furnishings at the Citarella Plaza in Watermill on Montauk Highway. There is a "pre-season sale" on everything in the store. Richard has stocked up with brand new fantastic merchandise, so now is the time to save big this week at Aesthetics. You will find furniture, tables, chairs, lamps, chandeliers, console tables, art, prints and everything has been reduced 20% to 50% off. Give a call at 726-5381.

While strolling on Main Street in Bridgehampton after taking the real plunge and cutting some more of my locks, to get the real "Blaise Cut" hair do, I stopped into Bittersweet Interiors. Here you will find that out of the ordinary painted French and English antique piece that you have been looking for. I loved the Swedish accent pieces, a nice look in any home. Lois, the owner of Bittersweet; has a great flair with custom upholstery and interior design. Stop, look and listen to her when you stop in, she has wonderful ideas and problem solvers...Give a call at 537-5400. By the way, for that Blaise look that everyone is raving about, call Blaise Haircutting Studio for an appointment, 537-3468.

At Loom Italia and Country Gear also on Main Street in Bridgehampton you must check out their incredible "Basement Sale". No kidding! Lots of eclectic furnishing sales and much more going on here.

Nearby at Tute Bene also on Main Street, check out the $25 shoe sale that is going on right now. Just think for only $100 you can get four pair...Stop in and say hi.

If you're strolling the Main Street of Sag Harbor, you must stop off at D.J. Hart. Dee has been busy designing and creating her latest treasures, turquoise necklaces, bracelets and earrings. All I have to say about this is WOW! This spiffy shop has much to offer lots of great clothing, hats, scarves, jewelry and fashionable accessories. I'll say no more, stop in and check D.J. Hart's out, you will love it!

At Harbor Hot Tubs, 'tis the season to set up your spa rental. Renting a spa was never so easy! All you need is a flat surface, an electrical outlet and a hose, something that everyone has on hand...It only costs pennies a day to operate the six person, twenty soothing hydrotherapy tub...How about that?

On that note, I'm rushing home to take a jacuzzi to relax my weary bones...and chart my shopping course for next week. If you have any questions or are having any sales, please email me at: shoptil@danspapers.com

Until next week! Ciao and Happy Shopping.

Away At School by David Rattiner

Spring

It is already spring of 2002, which is pretty amazing if you ask me. Ever since the nightmarish loss of an hour of sleep a couple weeks ago, the days have grown longer and dinnertime now feels similar to lunchtime. The birds are chirping everywhere, the buds are beginning to grow on trees and the weather is delightfully warmer. Some people say that spring puts love in the air and Cupid's arrows hit more people than in the winter. Spring here in Boston is just that season that comes right before summer. Finally, when spring is over and summer rolls around you can go into the ocean without having to wear a wetsuit, you can get stuck for an hour trying to find a parking space and the Hamptons transform from quaint little winter towns into a world renowned, summer hotspot where anybody who is anybody comes out to have a great time and enjoy the area's beauty.

I honestly miss this transformation; here in Boston there is no similar transformation. If anything, it gets quieter in the summer because all of the college kids go home on their summer vacations. The city of Boston actually softens up and loses its buzz because all of the people migrate to different areas of the U.S. But the springtime at home is one of the best times to be around the Hamptons and I miss it tremendously.

While growing up in East Hampton I can remember my favorite things that I enjoyed during the springtime. The first thing is definitely the duck pond where you can go through the trails and feed the ducks bread. It is amazing down in that area during the springtime. All of the ducks are back from their winter vacations and they all seem so excited to be back in the Hamptons again. Spending an afternoon down there really is worth it.

The second greatest thing to do is head down to the beach if it is warm enough. For some reason, in the past three years, probably because of global warming, it has become significantly warmer at this time of year. If the wind is not too strong, throwing a big comforter down on the beach and reading a book in the sun is great. With the sound of the ocean is rumbling while you read, you feel like you are one of the luckiest people in the world because you are sitting on one of the most beautiful beaches anywhere. If it is still a little too cold to wear a bathing suit, don't hesitate to throw on your most comfy sweats and read. Even reading this newspaper is absolutely wonderful when you are at the ocean. While I am writing this, I am reminded how great it was senior year of high school to drive down to the beach and read Hamlet for English.

Spring has sprung for students in Cambridge

Another great thing to do in the spring is to take advantage of Herrick Park in East Hampton and throw a football around. The park there is simply gorgeous and when you get tired of playing on the play ground or running around near the softball field, you can just walk less than five minutes to any one of the many places to grab a bottle of water to cool you down. Then you can always go grab something to eat and see a movie, which is right in that area as well. I sure do miss spring in the Hamptons.

Now don't get me wrong: it is not like I hate spring up here in Boston. It is just that there is something so magical about our area that it is really difficult to capture it all on a piece of paper. Especially this time of year, everything around you feels like it is building for the better and that only the best is yet to come. So while I am up here in Boston stressing about finals and wishing that I had an ocean ten minutes away, keep in mind that the summer rush is on its way and that the lull before the storm can be just as exciting as the storm itself. So just make sure that you never catch yourself waiting around for the big summer boom, because the season right now is one of the best times to be in the Hamptons. As for me, I'll see you this summer.

Honoring the Artist: Priscilla Bowden

There may be many words that might describe both Priscilla Bowden's life and art, but "process" seems most appropriate. For example, Ms. Bowden's experiences form a continuous series of actions, culminating in her commitment to art: a medieval history degree ("making me unemployable," she says with a laugh); a stint as a guest editor at Mademoiselle magazine after college which lasted three years; study in France on a fellowship; enrollment at the Art Students' League; secretarial work for art dealer Stanley Moss; and finally, a move to the East End where she's been ever since.

At the time, Ms. Bowden wasn't exactly aware how these actions would be directed toward some end or objective, as the term "process" implies, but they may be related. (To her credit, Ms. Bowden is most willing to consider these speculations about such relationships.)

A case in point: her landscapes' attention to detail may derive from her work at Mademoiselle, their sense of place perhaps also coming from her studies in medieval history. (A more direct link is the fact that Ms. Bowden loves to go fossil hunting in a very ancient region, Lymme Regis, England.) Another recent connection to Mademoiselle is her interest in making a video featuring fashion models.

There are times in Ms. Bowden's life and art, however, when process assumes other meanings, suggesting more spontaneous actions that give her paintings a liberating sensibility: her summer sojourns with husband, writer Jeffrey Potter, to Nova Scotia, a place which is "quiet, unspoiled and a relief from East End traffic." Ms. Bowden's love of opera (and subsequent trip last summer to Bayreuth, Germany, to attend the Wagner Music Festival) may also inform her work in other subtle ways.

There's no doubt, however, that the events of September 11, while beyond Ms. Bowden's personal expe-

STILL LIFE AT SAG HARBOR PICTURE GALLERY

The still life photography of Ion Zupeu, now at the Sag Harbor Picture Gallery, will dispel any notions you might have about the genre. These are not just pretty pictures of perfect flowers in pristine vases. While some great artists and photographers are known for their still lifes, we can't remember any recent individuals who have impressed us like Mr. Zupeu.

There's something about Mr. Zupeu's expressionistic style that lends itself to his notions about objects. It has little to do with low-key lighting being an effective and dramatic way of presenting photographic images. Rather, the style reinforces the idea that objects have character, feelings and personalities of their own, that they are animate instead of lifeless. So too, is the essence of expressionism.

We wonder if Mr. Zupeu's Eastern European background also lends itself to such expressionism and, by extention, to the respect which people living there give to the magical qualities found in everyday objects.

Still life photography by Ion Zupeu

Regardless, Mr. Zupeu's various vessels, flowers, keys, and locks are imbued with magic, a trait transforming the commonplace into something more. That "something more" could even exist in the spiritual or mythical realm, it is that powerful a transfiguration. Transformation takes place in a second context, when a leaf resting on a vase resembles a bird about to fly off.

Personification is also at work, as Mr. Zupeu's single and aggregate blossoms assume human qualities as they either languish or cavort, depending on how we interpret the photograph's ambience. Even the picture with a lock and key harbors a human dimension. We are tempted to "read" the piece like a narrative, with each item playing a part in the progressive story.

Another arresting concept is also apparent: the isolation of individual flowers (roses / tulips) juxtaposed with groups of blossoms. Therefore, each image is primordial, pure and abstract as well as concrete.

Which all goes to prove once again that the ordinary can be extraordinary.

Ion Zupeu's work will be on view at the Sag Harbor Picture Gallery until April 30.

The Dan's Papers They Made The Movie Here Film Festival Spring 2002

CUDDLY WATER MILL A STAGE FOR CHILLING CHURNING DRAMA OF TWISTED SEX, SADISM AND BONDAGE NOT TO MENTION A FEW MURDERS

Dan's Papers' Free Film Festival is filling the spacious Duke Hall at Southampton College with a knowing audience and, this week, with chills, spills, pills, thrills, windmills, flared nostrils and romantic entwining tendrils! Yes, sir! This week's movie has 'em all.

Suppose you find a naked blonde lady hanging around the house who looks like a Playboy model. "Not bad," you say; just a kind of typical Hampton weekend quest. But suppose she's hanging by the neck from a ceiling light fixture? That's bad! That's a typical scene from Whispers in the Dark, a 1992, naked spellbinding, wrist and ankle binding murder mystery of the whodunit type. If you have no hang-ups and are not turned off by women hanging from turned on light fixtures, run to the college. You will want to see Alan Alda involved in a movie that drags blood and pyschopathia sexualis from a very kinky maintenance room in Manhattan's Tavern on the Green to the Hamptons' grassy dunes gone berserk in Mr. Alda's own peaceful Lionel Train, model town of Water Mill.

As produced by Marty Bregman and written and directed by Christopher Crow, Whispers in the Dark shouts loudly for attention with sensational scenes of bondage and sadism. They try to muffle the pandering with a satin comforter of shiny glamour and analytical observation, so, much of it comes off like early television mystery shows, but spiked with explicitness not yet allowed on the tube. The link to television, I think is one of the film's producers, William Link, who created a long chain of those very popular TV series, like "Columbo."

Whispers In The Dark

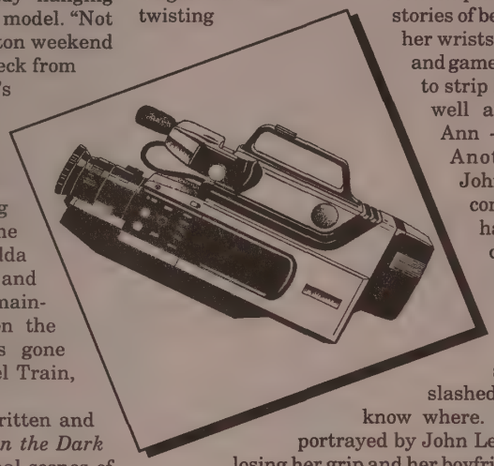
On the screen we first see a writhing nude that turns out to be a troublesome dream, soon to become a nightmare of psychiatrist Ann Hecker, darkly played by Annabella Sciorra. The girl of her dreams is her patient, Eve, played with bare honesty by Deborah Unger. She has been tempting Ann with mind twisting stories of being strung up by her wrists and neck for fun and games. She also wants to strip her body bare as well as her mind for Ann – and she does!



Another patient, Johnny C., an ex-con/bad-boy/weirdo has turned to psychiatry and painting angelic nudes (what else) to adjust. His nudes are strung up and slashed from here to you know where. He is forcefully portrayed by John Leguizamo. Ann is losing her grip and her boyfriend, so she turns to her university mentor and good friend, Dr. Leo Green and his wife, Sarah, caringly played by Alan Alda and Jill Clayburgh. Then she falls madly in love with a tough-looking, but tender pilot who owns his own airplane. He could be Mr. Wright. His name is actually Doug, and he is played with a prominent nose by James Sheridan. But, when Eve is found hanging like a chandelier, Ann thinks Doug dunnit. On the other hand, Detective Morgenstern, played by Anthony LaPaglia thinks Johnny C. did it. Johnny C. gets angry and tries to decorate Ann's body with a razor. But, she still thinks Doug do it – but no – maybe her ex-boyfriend did it. Maybe it was the detective. Personally, I think William Link did it in the study with a typewriter.

Now to review the film's beach house in Water Mill. It's your basic beach place, minimally decorated with a frenzied guest or two, contemporary furniture, a few antiques and fresh cooked corn on the dinner table. No, it isn't Alan Alda's own house. He knows better than to rent a house for a thriller – it gets wrecked.

To top off all this, there'll be delicious discussion and cheese, fruit and liquid libations. We'll chat as calmly as possible or, we'll wreck the place.

Whispers In The Dark will be shown on Saturday April 20 at 2:30 p.m at Southampton College's Duke Lecture Hall in Chancellor's Hall (the new building at main parking area). Admission is free, refreshments served. Hosted by Guy-Jean de Fraumeni, assisted by Sarah Halsey.

Big Trouble

If, on these plain, local streets you should, per chance, see a smiling, cherubic-faced guy with contradictory black eyebrows and, most contrary to the apple-cheeked grin, a big cigar, that would be Barry Sonnenfeld, the cheery fellow who directed 1991's Addams Family, then went on to make more stylistic fun with Get Shorty and Men in Black. You'd think Mr. S would be driving a vintage convertible in Beverly Hills, but, no, we knew he considered this coast his when he titled his television series, "Tick." However, he's chosen this coast's Miami, as the location of his latest release, Big Trouble, to our chagrin, as we want more movies made here on the East End. Any which way, we always want the best for our hometown boys but, Big Trouble got into a bit of hot water there.(Our waters are COOL, Barry).

Barry Sonnenfeld's screen adaptation of newspaper humorist, Dave Barry's first novel hurts itself, a whole lot, by stumbling over its terribly complex plot. I mean stumbling – like falling-down pratfalls – similar to Burlesque pants-dropping when a laugh is needed. There are so many of these and other excesses, Mr. S black-and-blues his directorial reputation and, as producer, he also deserves a black eye for not seeing that, in these years, making a movie that culminates when a nuclear explosive is put onto a plane, just should not fly. It's especially sad to say, for a movie that I thought was to be hilarious – the reshooting delay could not help all the things wrong that need the ingenious Florida narrative of thugs, dolts, louts, lummoxes, rubes and wiseguys as writ large by Elmore Leonard (fine Mr. S collaborator of Get Shorty).

Attempting to stand out (it's hard with cut and bruised shins, knees and egos) in a cast (plastered and otherwise) of thousands (it seems). Doing their usual best are Tim Allen, Rene Russo, Stanley Tucci, Dennis Farina and many others of Mr. S's Traveling Road Company, based in Amagansett.

ED KOCH Goes To THE MOVIES

Kissing Jessica Stein (-)

This film overall received good reviews and I was looking forward to seeing it. Several scenes are cute and amusing, but they don't add up to a really good film.

The basic premise is intriguing. Two heterosexual women unhappy in their love lives decide to try a lesbian fling. They meet one another through a personal ad in the Village Voice newspaper. The film is set in New York City, and an effort is made to show its skylines and quaint streets as often as possible and while the camera work is not bad, it's just not very creative.

Jessica (Jennifer Westfeldt) works in a publishing house. Her boss Josh (Scott Cohen) is someone she dated in college. When he addresses her he calls her Stein and criticizes almost everything she does. Jessica has been on a lot of blind dates that simply turned into emotional disasters. She paints as a hobby and expects to end up living life alone, notwithstanding the efforts of her very Jewish mother (Tovah Feldshuh) who constantly plots to fix her up with a nice Jewish guy.

Helen (Heather Juergensen) works in an art gallery. She has an active sex life using the delivery boy to satisfy her sexual needs, but permanent relationships are not happening. She has two male friends who are gay and decides to give lesbianism a chance.

How the two women deal with what for a bona fide lesbian would be the coming out issue as well as the impact on their families and old boyfriends are interesting situations that should have been intense and provocative. Too often, however, this film's script is sophomoric in dialogue and elicited no emotional response, at least from me.

Why this flick got good reviews is probably explained by the critics' interest in a plot rarely plowed and their wanting to encourage efforts to explore the unexplored. A number of people leaving the theater told me they enjoyed the movie. Go see it if you have to choose among other mediocre flicks. You won't have a bad evening, but you may forget the film immediately on leaving the theater.

theatre review: of mice and men... by jolie trueman-honey

The Best Laid Schemes...

George and Lennie. Many of us met these two characters long before we ever read John Steinbeck's novel Of Mice and Men in ninth or tenth grade English. Remember the cartoon? They were both dogs, I think: the first, a little smart one, the other, a big dumb one. "Which way did they go, George? Which way did they go?"

Few characters in literature become icons, securing themselves a position in our collective consciousness. But certainly among them are Lennie and George, the two traveling ranch hands who share a dream of someday owning their own land.

George (Joseph Desane), Lennie (Edward Kassar) and Crooks(Al Jones)

So, when I received the assignment to review the Hampton Theatre Company's production of Of Mice and Men, which is presently running at the John Drew Theater at Guild Hall in East Hampton, I felt as if I were revisiting old friends. I soon realized, however, that while I had read the novel many times and had seen all three movie versions, I had never seen a stage production.

Interestingly, when Steinbeck wrote the novel, he was attempting to create a new genre which he called the "play-novelette." The book, which is barely 120 pages in most editions, is primarily dialogue, with very little description. It is a tribute to Steinbeck's art that the first scene, a mere conversation between George and Lennie, could not only define each of their characters, but also the complexity of their relationship. When George gets fed up with Lennie's constant forgetfulness and with the trouble he always brings to the pair, Lennie says, "George, you want I should go away and leave you alone?" and George responds, "Yeah? How'd you eat? You ain't got sense enough to find nothing to eat." And shortly after, "I been mean, ain't I?" So, it's not a surprise that immediately after publishing the novel in 1937, Steinbeck began work on a play version, which ran successfully on Broadway in 1938.

From my perspective, one of the strengths of the novel (and the movies that followed – the first, starring Burgess Meredith and Lon Chaney, Jr. is still the best, in my opinion) is the seamless quality of the story. From the end of that first scene when George instructs Lennie to look around and remember this place "down by the brush near the river" where they are camping so that just in case he gets in trouble ("like you always done before") he can return and hide and wait for George, we know that eventually we will return to this place. And every event that follows, the bad impression that the pair makes on the boss when Lennie forgets his instructions and opens "his big flapper," the fury that the giant Lennie inspires in Curley, the boss' short son, the mess that Curley's wife will make by hanging around the bunkhouse, all of these events lead us inexorably, like a runaway train, to the tragic conclusion.

That seamlessness is diminished in the play version. In a stage play, of necessity, sets must be moved, and the time consumed in this activity creates breaks in the tension of the story, breaks that unfortunately detract from the powerful emotional ride. It must be noted, however, that the sets in this production were beautifully designed, and they, along with the set decor, added greatly to the realism of the production.

Another shortcoming of the play, is that it is without animals. I don't know if Steinbeck's play eliminates animals onstage or if this was a decision made by director James Ewing. I do know that animals onstage are a dicey business, but in certain plays they are just irreplaceable. In the book, we can practically smell that old dog of Candy's; in the movie we see its doleful look as the pitiless Carlson takes the dog outside to "put him out of his misery." Thus, when we hear that shot ring out, we truly feel Candy's pain. When the animal is always offstage, much of the impact is lost.

But perhaps these criticisms are on the order of apples and oranges. A play is not a movie is not a novel. And while maybe the stage does not serve this story as the perfect medium, there is still so much to recommend this production, which was marked by an aura of professionalism rarely seen in a non-equity company.

The themes are universal: the need to find a home and a sense of permanence, the need to connect with other people, the need to dream of a better life. And these desires are represented not only by Lennie (Edward Kassar) and George (Joseph DeSane), but by almost all of the characters: old Candy (William Blanton) who, lacking a hand, feels he will be "canned" soon and won't have any place to go, Crooks (Al Jones), the stable buck, whose loneliness is palpable as he is excluded from the bunkhouse because he is black. Even Curley's wife, not a sympathetic character as played in this production by Lillie Jayne, seeks companionship to allay the isolation that she feels living on the ranch.

While the performances were a bit uneven, the play was obviously well directed and its success is largely attributable to an outstanding performance by Joseph DeSane as George. His strong and sensitive portrayal of the multi-dimensional George supported the entire production, and his performance in the last scene rivaled that of Burgess Meredith.

Also outstanding was Evan Thomas as Slim, the wise and compassionate jerkline skinner, whose word, after the boss's, was law.

Yes, the Hampton Theatre Company proved once again the truth of the words of Scottish poet Robert Burns:

The best-laid schemes o' mice and men
Gang aft agley,
An' lea'e us nought but grief an' pain
For promis'd joy.

Not only would a trip to this ambitious production be an enjoyable evening of theater, but it would pay homage to the timelessness of Steinbeck's work and also prove a great way to wish the late Mr. Steinbeck, an East Ender himself, a happy 100th birthday.

Of Mice and Men will be playing on Thurs., Fri., and Sat. evenings at 8pm and Sundays at 2pm through April 28. For tickets, call 631 653-8955.*

Edward Rice, an adventuresome American writer who wrote a best-selling 1990 biography of the 19th- century British explorer Richard Francis Burton and who was the godfather to Thomas Merton, the monk and author of The Seven Storey Mountain, died on August 18, 2001. He was 82 and lived in Sagaponack, N.Y.

Mr. Rice, who was also a photographer, was almost decapitated by a shotgun wielded by a maharajah on a peacock hunt in India. He was stoned by peasants in Bangladesh. He traveled through Asia and Africa, writing and doing photographic medical reports for the United Nations. "Everything I did was a preparation for Burton," he said in a 1990 interview.

Mr. Rice's biography was called Captain Sir Richard Francis Burton: The Secret Agent Who Made the Pilgrimage to Mecca, Discovered the Kama Sutra, and Brought the Arabian Nights to the West. In a front- page review in The New York Times Book Review, the British novelist Anthony Burgess wrote, "Mr. Rice's telling of the tale - an odyssey really, of the travail and travels" of Burton "and of the unquenchable urge to get at the truth of life that rode above the tale - is first-class."

Mr. Rice founded a magazine for Catholic laymen, Jubilee. His many writings include a score of books, about topics like the Ganges River, ancient Babylon and Margaret Mead. He was also the author of The Man in the Sycamore Tree, a biography of Thomas Merton, a friend.

How Does Your Garden Grow?

The Grass Is Always Greener...

Oddly enough, every type of grass has an ideal length, so mowing your grass isn't simply a matter of aesthetics, there is the health of your grass to consider as well. Mow too short and your grass will be brown; mow too long and your grass will be brown. The ideal lengths for some common types of grass are as follows: bahia, blue gramma and buffalo grasses should be 2 to 3 inches high. Fescu, Kentucky bluegrass, rye grass and St. Augustine grasses 1-1/2 to 2-1/2 inches. Common Bermuda, centipede and zoysia grasses 1 inch.

To achieve the proper height on your mower blade, measure on a hard flat surface – with the spark plug detached – and adjust the deck height to the desired level. A sharp blade is essential to the health of your grass and it should be sharpened regularly to prevent damage to grass blades. Mow the grass when it is one-third longer than it should be and do it when the grass is dry or you will have a wet clumpy mess on your hands. When you get clumps, rake them up or your lawn will be smothered. Thumb your nose at your neighbor while sipping lemonade and relaxing in your hammock and staring at your luscious green lawn.

Think Hard, Then Soft

If you don't have the right framework to work with then your garden will never look quite right. It's like the old saying, it's not the pants that make you look fat, it's the fat that makes you look fat. What lies beneath will determine the final appearance of your garden. The most important elements to make your yard enjoyable are privacy and a comfortable area to sit. To wit, good fences make good neighbors – and gardens – and so do decks. Beyond those basics the choice of gardening design is a personal matter. Raised flowerbeds with flowers that are suitable for the area and suitable to your taste, perhaps a little pond or fountain, maybe some vegetables. Gardens are first and foremost all about pleasing yourself, so do what you like. Just remember, when you begin landscaping keep the final design in mind and accommodate those wishes so that you're not left with a berm where you wanted the hot tub and a trench where you wanted the barbecue.

Another Semi-Bright Idea

A little bit of light on a dark summer night can add a bit of the James Bond allure to any garden. Plus, it will help prevent stubbed toes. Installing a lighting system in your garden need not be a pricey endeavor either. You won't need as much light as you would inside, so you can opt for low-voltage lighting that will spare the electric bills. God said let there be light on the first day, you have the chance to say let there be light on any day you want, so the choice of what to light and where to light is up to you. A particular group of flowers, some trees or a gnarled group of vines, it is all at your whim. By creating a mixture of up lighting and down lighting you can add a number of dimensions to your garden. Light a path that leads to a majestic tree and draw the eye further back into the garden with brightly-lit roses. A number of companies offer a variety of lighting fixtures that can be professionally installed or done by the homeowner. Whichever route you choose, lighting will add a new dimension to your garden and give you hours of enjoyment after dark.

Get A Little Bit Wild

Wild flowers are like the man of every woman's dreams: they're low-maintenance, they look good and they only need attention a couple times a year. Available in a variety of colors, wild flowers are adapted to a wide range of environments and they are often available as an assortment of seeds selected for a particular geographic region. At $10 to $40 for enough seeds to plant 1,000 square-feet, they are also a bargain. Before planting, remove as many weeds as possible from the area and try not to till the soil too much as it will bring buried weed seeds to the surface. Scatter the seeds, water and watch them grow.

Don't Forget The Herb

What is sour cream or cream cheese without chives? Plain. Chives are one of the easiest of the herbs to grow in your garden – and let's be honest, herbs are really easy to grow. It's actually harder to get rid of chives once you have them than it is to grow them in the first place. Your basic chive will grow to about a foot tall, with a hollow stem and a lovely, light oniony flavor. Think salads, soups and sauces. For the daring, try garlic chives, which have flat leaves, white flowers and a garlic and chive flavor that works like regular chives, but also goes well with meats. Growing chives is about as easy as growing a giant bean stalk with magic beans. Take some seeds, plant them in mid to late spring in a sunny area with rich soil. Dry or moist soil will work. Sow them in clumps about one foot apart. They can be harvested in six weeks and work from the outside in. Start baking potatoes. –J.M.

Beyond Organics: Starting Flowers From Seed

. Growing your own plants from seed is neither difficult nor expensive. For one thing, you don't need a collection of costly special tools and equipment.

Losses from severe winter-kill, over-crowding by more belligerent plants and neglecting to divide and reset took away a number of species I consider essential to a good perennial border. So last spring I ordered some new seeds and prepared a bed. Previously, I tried starting perennials in cold frames in February and March, and also made fall plantings in September.

A few annuals were also planted in this seedbed and, probably because they quickly exceeded in growth flowers planted two weeks earlier, it was where they would remain. The planting was done the first week in June and by the first week in July I was able to transplant some of the perennials to their permanent beds. While we were getting some nice rains.

Lupines, in particular, need to be transplanted when very small, for they have a long taproot, and do not do well if this is broken. This is also true of hollyhocks, and it is really better to plant these where thy are to remain.

The gilia, or standing cypress, one of the most striking plants in the border when in bloom, is not difficult to grow if it is planted where water will not be over the crown during the first year of its growth. It is not a long-lived perennial, and perhaps should be treated as a biennial, with new seed planted each year. Once started, it will re-seed itself. Just remember to set the plants on higher ground, and do not let leaves mat on it during the winter. Small branches may be placed on the plants before the leaves drift over them to help protect them over winter.

Not all garden seed catalogs list gilia, but the rubra variety will grow from four to six feet high, with great spikes of scarlet blooms, By watching the plants and the weather, I am able to transplant all the plants that I have places for by August, keeping them watered. Thus they become well established during the fall growing season, ready for immediate growth when spring arrives.

There are three requirements, or rules, which must be observed by any gardener; be them a rank beginner or the most experienced green-thumber.

1. A well-prepared level seedbed of good organic soil. Notice the emphasis on level. Fine seed, and much seed is fine, must be planted very shallow. Even a slight slope will erode with the hard rains common in spring, and valuable seed will be washed out or covered too deeply. So select the spot for a seedbed with this in mind. Prepare the soil carefully, leaving no clods, and firm it well. A board laid down and walked on several times, repeating until the whole bed is well flattened, is the best way to accomplish this, or, wait for a good rain to settle the soil.

2. Never let the surface of the bed dry out. Make the bed within reach of the garden hose, so that it may be thoroughly showered every day with a fine spray of water.

3. Secure fresh seed from a reliable garden seed catalog. Do not depend on a packet of seeds from your local supermarket. Flower seeds are very short lived, and many will sprout only the first year. No reliable seed company will send out old seeds, and most will guarantee satisfaction.

Another advantage in ordering from a garden seed catalog is that you have a big variety to choose from. There are many newer introductions of almost every species, and it may have been one of these you admired so much in one of your friends garden. So it is advisable to inquire as to the particular variety when viewing other gardens.

Tooling Around In The Garden

With early spring comes planting season and the spring showers (we hope), so you will need the proper tools to get your garden going. Now is the time to do your digging, soiling and adding of new flowerbeds. Depending on your needs, you should think about your realistic garden ambitions and the soil and space that you have to work with. Consider a few of our suggestions to get your garden going this spring and summer.

It is better to have a small, well-maintained garden than a large space that is unkempt and full of weeds. Reflect on the amount of time and energy you want to spend in your garden and select your tools accordingly.

Here is our guide for the absolute basics to get your home vegetable, herb or flowerbed going.

You will want to start, especially early in the season, when the soil is hard packed from the winter and elements with some good, with strong ground breaking tools. Start with a great three pack that includes the Groundbreaker Mini Tiller, Mini Planter and the Mini Pick.

These tools each have a nice, sturdy 16-inch hardwood handle to grip onto as you get going on the packed earth. This is the step that really requires the most muscle. Later in the season, as you move more into maintenance, you will employ the more delicate tools. Now is the time where you want something sturdy that works as an extension of your muscle and that will give you leverage as you dig in. It is easier with a shorter handle to get closer to the ground. Use all of your back muscles rather than twisting and turning your spine. These tools weigh less than two pounds, so digging sod, removing rocks and mining your initial potting holes is not so difficult.

The Mini Pick: This tool features a pointed metal blade for deep digging and has a mattock on the other side to easily push aside the rougher top soil.

The Mini Tiller: This tool also has a mattock on one side and a three-pronged tiller on the other. Use the tiller to break up the area and the mattock to push the soil away.

The Mini Planter: The planter has a pointed blade for digging and loosening the soil and broad heart-shaped blade for moving the soil. Use this tool when you are ready to put the seeds in the ground and even out the ground around the area.

The pack of three is available at most hardware and garden stores. Consider them as your essential early season starter tools and chances are you will have them for years to come.

According to garden experts, a well-designed tool is essential. Ergonomics is the most important element element in selecting the best tools for you; it is a science that deals with designing tools that will be the most efficient and energy sparing for people to use.

A good cutting spade may be your most versatile tool of all. Keeping your spade sharp (like you would an ax) is essential and will alleviate a lot of strain from your arms and back. A sharp spade with a long handle is good for digging holes for landscape plants, transplanting beds and roots to a new area or even just cleaning up after your dog.

The garden shovel is designed differently depending on the region and the quality of the soil. American gardeners for example, tend more towards a long four-foot handle, while European gardeners usually favor a shorter handle with a flat spade at the end. Whatever your preference is, the purpose of the shovel is to first cut and then pry. At the store you will see a variety, ranging from a flimsy economy tool – to a heavy industrial tool. It is recommended to try out the shovel first in the store, and make sure that you will be agile enough to control the tool once you get in the garden.

A delicate pair of pruning shears is another essential item. You need to make sure that the blade on your shears remains well oiled and sharp throughout the season. You will use these shears often, especially later in the season to harvest and maintain. A good shear can last you for seasons, and a neglected shear can quickly become rusted and useless. –Jessica Romm

Beyond Organics: Organic Matter, It Really Matters

Organic matter influences the physical and chemical properties of soils far out of proportion to the small quantities needed or present. It commonly accounts for at least half of the cation-exchange capacity of soils and is responsible perhaps more than any other single factor for the stability of soil particle aggregates. Furthermore, it supplies energy and valuable chemical for soil micro-organisms. These microorganisms break organic matter down into simple compounds for plant use.

Organic matter will make our light sandy soils heavier and our heavy clay soils lighter. In sandy soils there is too much space around the large irregular particles. This allows necessary air to enter, but it fails to hold water. Add a fine textured organic material to sandy soil, and the particles will lodge in the large spaces between the sand grains. This allows water to be trapped keeping it within the reach of roots. In effect it makes sandy soils heavier.

Clay soils severely limit air space. Adding organic matter to heavy clay soils lightens them by wedging coarser organic soil particles between the small clay particles. The finer almost decomposed parts of organic matter are sticky and act as glue to aggregate or hold the fine clay particles together in small crumbs. This loosens up the clay and allows it to breathe.

Organic matter plays an important role in fertility. Valuable soil nutrients are held in solution and are ready to be absorbed by plant roots. The addition of organic matter improves a clay soil when the clay becomes aggregated and root penetration is made easier. Sandy soils amended with organic matter holds water and nutrients in the upper soil level where roots will have access to them.

Soil temperatures are also dependent in many cases on the organic matter in the soil. Heavy clay soils retain moisture and admit little air to warm up soils for seed germination and growth. Organic mater added to clay soil will allow more warm air in, thus allowing the soil to respond more quickly to temperature changes.

Soils in many areas have near one-percent organic matter. Good soil should have at least five percent. To increase this percentage it would seem logical to simply add some type of organic matter to clay and sandy soils. This, of course, is the remedy, but it's not quite that simple.

Once living organic matter in the soil is made up of a number of elements including carbon and nitrogen. Soil microorganisms feed on organic matter as they decompose it. They use the carbon for energy and nitrogen as building materials for their own bodies.

What happens to a soil when we add organic matter, which has a high carbon to nitrogen ratio? Let's look at wheat straw. Suppose we amend a clay or sandy soil with wheat straw to reach our minimum goal for five-percent organic matter. Since the carbon is high, microorganisms feast on all the carbon available. The microorganism population is stimulated and increases in number as these organisms use up the carbon for energy; they also need nitrogen to take care of their own growing needs. Herein lies the problem. If the organisms do not have enough nitrogen in the organic material they must borrow nitrogen from the soil supply. This puts them in direct competition with plants, which also need nitrogen. If the nitrogen in the soil cannot support both needs, then there may be a stunting in plant growth.

Leaves, peat moss, compost, and manure almost always contain enough nitrogen; we must add additional nitrogen or allow at least a six-month decomposition time before planting.

On sandy soils cover crops or green manures really help in adding additional organic material. Plant rye or winter peas in the winter or millet in the summer. Turn this under one month before planting.

Organic amendments will work miracles in problem soils. They make the soil come alive as a dynamic growing medium. Adding organic materials along with regular materials along with regular soil testing will almost certainly insure our gardening success.

silvia lehrer's cooking column

There is considerable inspiration at play behind many of today's salads. With sensible emphasis on light, colorful and inventive ideas, salads are open to an array of possibilities. But I will cut to the chase for today's composed salads.

Composed salads are a complete and substantial meal. There is simplicity to making main course salads as much of the preparation can be done ahead.

A warm salad of rosy salmon fillets are sautéed and served over a bed of sprightly greens and garden fresh herbs then dressed with a shallot mustard vinaigrette. Thick slices of fresh tuna is marinated in a Pan Asian dressing and grilled rare. Lime and white wine vinaigrette dresses colorful radicchio cups to cradle the tuna with slices of avocado and chive spears.

And I absolutely love plump grilled shrimp served on thick slices of grilled country bread topped with a garlicky tomato basil salsa for a warm sunny lunch. Happy salad days are ahead.

WARM SALMON SALAD WITH SHALLOT VINAIGRETTE

Serves 6

For the Salmon:
6-4 ounce boneless salmon fillets with skin
2-3 shallots, finely chopped
10-12 large basil leaves, stacked and cut into julienne
1 tablespoon light soy
3 tablespoons extra-virgin olive oil
For the Salad:
6-8 cups mixed greens, Radicchio, endive, romaine, watercress, or any combination
2 tablespoons finely chopped flat-leaf Italian parsley
2 tablespoons fresh tarragon leaves, coarsely chopped
Tarragon leaves or parsley sprigs for garnish
For the Vinaigrette:
2-3 shallots, finely chopped
1 tablespoon grainy Dijon mustard
2-3 tablespoon sherry wine vinegar
1/2 teaspoon coarse (kosher) salt
Freshly ground pepper
7-8 tablespoons extra-virgin olive oil

1. With a sharp knife, score salmon skin on the diagonal. Repeat cutting in opposite direction to create a criss-cross effect. Rinse fish, pat dry with paper towel and put in a glass bowl. Mix shallots, basil and soy in a separate bowl and whisk in 2 tablespoons oil. Pour over fillets. Cover with plastic wrap and refrigerate up to several hours ahead.
2. Prepare greens: Wash greens separately, spin dry, and carefully roll in paper towel to absorb excess moisture. Put into airtight plastic bags and refrigerate if doing ahead.
4. Prepare vinaigrette: Put chopped shallots, vinegar, salt and pepper in a bowl. Slowly whisk in oil until mixture is homogenous. Taste to adjust seasoning if necessary.

Preheat oven to 375 degrees

5. Heat remaining tablespoon oil in a large ovenproof skillet over medium heat. Put in salmon fillets skin side down and cook about 5 minutes to crisp the skin (the flesh should still be pink).
6. Meanwhile, mix salad greens with the vinaigrette and gently toss to mix. Divide equally and arrange on 6 dinner plates.
7. Transfer salmon to preheated oven for 1-2 minutes then place each fillet over greens. Sprinkle with a dash of coarse salt (for texture), garnish with herbs if desired and serve.

GRILLED MARINATED TUNA WITH LIME VINAIGRETTE

Serves 6-8

1 pound tuna steak, about 1 inch thick
1-2 cloves garlic, finely chopped
1 tablespoon grated fresh ginger
2-3 tablespoons soy sauce
1 tablespoon sake
2-3 tablespoons finely chopped fresh coriander
For the dressing:
2 shallots finely chopped
2-3 teaspoons Dijon mustard
Jest and 1 tablespoon juice from lime
1 tablespoon white wine vinegar
Course (kosher) salt and freshly ground pepper
1 tablespoon snipped chives
5-6 tablespoon extra-virgin olive oil
For the salad:
1 head radicchio
3-4 ripe avocados
2-3 tablespoons lime juice
Julienne of lime rind
Chives for garnish

1. Put tuna steak in a nonreactive bowl. Mix marinade ingredients, pour over the fish and let marinate 30 minutes. Cover with plastic wrap and refrigerate.
2. Finely chop shallots in a mixing bowl or in bowl of food processor fitted with steel knife. Add mustard, lime juice, vinegar, seasonings and stir or process to mix. Add oil in a slow steady stream and whisk or process to mix until mixture is homogeneous.
3. Lift tuna from marinade and pat dry. Place over ashen hot coals and grill for 1 1/2 minutes on each side, basting occasionally with marinade. Do not overcook.
4. Unfurl whole leaves from head of radicchio then wash and spin dry. Wrap in paper towels to absorb excess moisture and store in refrigerator if doing ahead. When ready to serve, divide greens and arrange on 6-8 salad plates. Cut avocados in half, remove and discard pit, then carefully scoop out meat from each half in one piece. Cut halves into 1/2 inch slices and arrange on a radicchio leaf. Sprinkle avocado with a bit of lime juice to prevent darkening. Spoon dressing over avocado and top with julienne of lime. Cut tuna into thin slices, arrange 2-3 slices on each plate and garnish with chive spears.

GRILLED SHRIMP WITH TOMATO SALSA ON BRUSCHETTA

A delicious and colorful do-ahead spring luncheon dish.

Serves 4-6

For the Bruschetta:
4-6 1/2 inch thick slices country bread (crusty round loaf)
Whole garlic cloves, skin left on and halved
Extra-virgin olive oil
Branches of thyme leaves for garnish
For the Tomato Salsa:
1/2 red onion, coarsely chopped
3 ripe tomatoes, peeled, seeded and cut into 1/2-inch dice
2 cloves garlic, finely chopped
1 cup fresh basil leaves washed, dried and cut into julienne
1/4 cup Balsamic or red wine vinegar
1/2 cup extra-virgin olive oil
Coarse salt and freshly ground pepper
1 bunch fresh arugula, washed and spin-dried
For the shrimp:
1 pound extra-large shrimp (16-20 count)
1 tablespoon fresh thyme
1/4 cup olive oil

1. Place bread slices on a cookie sheet and grill, broil or toast until lightly golden. Rub each slice with a halved clove of garlic then drizzle slices with olive oil. They can be prepared up to a week ahead stored in a waxed paper lined cookie tin.
2. For the salsa put coarsely chopped onion in bowl of cold water for 15-20 minutes. Drain and squeeze dry in a clean kitchen towel. Place tomatoes in a crockery or glass bowl and add drained onions. Scatter chopped garlic and basil julienne over onions, top with vinegar and oil and season with salt and pepper. Do not mix. Cover bowl with plastic wrap and refrigerate up to several hours ahead. Wash and spin-dry arugula and carefully roll up on paper towels. Place in plastic bag and refrigerate until ready to serve.
3. Shell and devein shrimp and put in a bowl. Add thyme leaves and oil and toss to coat. Place shrimp on wooden skewers that were presoaked for 20-30 minutes.

Preheat grill or broiler.

4. When ready to serve arrange arugula equally on 4-6 luncheon-size plates. Place bruschetta over greens. Stir tomato mixture in bowl and taste to adjust seasoning if necessary. Spoon a layer of salsa over bruschetta to cover.
5. Place skewered shrimp directly on rack and grill or broil for 2 minutes on each side, until opaque and springy to the touch. Place 3-4 shrimp over top, garnished with sprig of thyme.

Bedell Cellars has raised the ceiling – literally! Springtime visitors to this prestigious North Fork winery will be greeted by a fresh new look. They just finished an extensive renovation project at their historic building that focused on redesigning the interior space of the structure to improve upon and expand its use. The project entailed raising the ceiling of the formerly cramped tasting room to reveal the full height and character of the original barn structure, which was built in 1919. A mezzanine was also added from which visitors may look down upon the tasting room, tank room and barrel room, as well as enjoy sweeping views of the vineyard. Pay a visit soon and see what's going on at Bedell!

Another season opener: La Fondita in Amagansett will be reopening on Wednesday, April 17 and they'll be open Wednesday through Sunday. Daily specials are featured, including the ever-popular "five tacos for $10" deal. Call 631-267-8800 to get those yummy enchiladas & tostadas!

There's been some changes to the Maidstone Arms' guest chef series featuring Drew Niepiront's Myriad Restaurant Group....here's the new lineup: Stephen Lewandowski from Tribeca Grill on May 19, Harold Moore from Montrachet on June 2, Edwyn Ferrari from Nobu on June 16, Frank Porto from Layla on June 23, and Kevin Garcia from Lucca on June 30.

One more sign of spring: Talented chef/owner Douglas Gulija of The Plaza Cafe in Southampton has unveiled a new seasonal tasting menu. The cost is $75; selective wine pairings are available for an additional $35. The menu features spring tastes such as grilled baby asparagus with lobster-morel ragout; and herb crusted lamb chop with roast garlic flan and morel sauce.

News from Star Room Restaurant: Kevin Penner and Gretchen Menser have now assumed shared cheffing responsibilities. Kevin, who also will take over chef duties at the 1770 House later this spring, will be the consulting chef and will work closely with Chef de Cuisine Gretchen Menser. Gretchen is a member of the James Beard Foundation and the former executive chef of NV/Tsunami, as well as Rowdy Hall. Also joining The Star Room are two of the Hamptons best-known front-of-the-house managers. Julie Shafer, formerly of Peter Miller's in Sag Harbor and Carol Covell, formerly of Della Femina in East Hampton and New York City. Carol will NOT be leaving her current position at Barrister's in Southampton.

Canalside dining, anyone? Indian Cove in Hampton Bays is open. They've got a great Sunday Seafood Festival, too: lobster, shrimp, mussels and clams with soup or salad and a glass of Stella Artois for $21.95.

Dining in The Hamptons

Suki Zuki

688 Montauk Hwy, Watermill
631-726-4600

Our idea of the ultimate Hamptons restaurant is a place that is full of familiar faces, diverse cuisine (not just chicken cooked four ways) – and reasonable prices. Throw in a groovy bar, some relaxed music, a young stylish staff and you have Suki Zuki, located in the old Megan's Saloon in Watermill. They are serving up some of the most inventive and thoughtful sushi on the East End and they don't stop at just sushi.

Suki Zuki which means "a matter of taste" in Japanese is one the coolest new eateries and boites around. Word is catching on and the bar and long wooden tables are filled nightly with patrons enjoying non-fussy, quality Japanese food at really fair prices. To go there once will almost definitely insure a trip back and next time you will want to bring all your friends.

The food is a diverse mix of Japanese fare, with an extensive list of sushi entrees as well as many grill specialties prepared on the house Robata grill. Head chef Toyo Kamatani, formerly of Pacific East and Sen in Sag Harbor, mans the grill and the sushi bar and invites you to try specialties from each.

Toyo's philosophy is one of simplicity, yet style abounds from this restraint. They do not try to get tricky with their food – and what results is what should happen with fresh food; the true flavor comes through. Choice is key at Suki Zuki and the quality of the ingredients really speaks for itself.

From the most experienced sushi connoisseur to the finicky sushi "virgin," Suki Zuki has something for everyone's tastes. And they are even kid-friendly!

We started out with some of the house special appetizers which included an awesome take on Teriyaki Chicken Salad, Shumai (steamed dumplings) with a tangy dipping sauce, Tuna Carpacio with capers and watercress and a platter of Kushiyaki (skewers), which consisted of chicken, duck, scallops, beef, shrimp and Tsukune (chicken meatballs). But our hands down favorite was the absolutely sublime melt-in-your-mouth miso glazed black cod. It is worth a trip to Suki Zuki just to try this. The fish was light and flavorful and cooked to perfection on the hot Robata grill. And if the meal were to stop there, we would have been more than content.

House specialties at Suki Zuki

But then again, recall that we live in an area known for fresh fish, some of the best in the country – all of the ideal tools to serve amazing quality sushi.

Suki Zuki serves up an extensive list of sushi and sashimi, special rolls and hand rolls. We sampled the house specialties: Naruto Maki: crab, tuna, tobiko and avocado wrapped in cucumber and served with a smooth ponzu dipping sauce. The Suki Zuki roll (lobster, avocado, tobiko and cucumber with a spicy dipping sauce). The Tuna Sandwich Roll (spicy tuna, tobiko, scallion and tempura flakes) and a fantastic Eel Roll. The selection of sashimi and sushi included amazingly fresh uni (don't be afraid), an amazing fatty white fish called Escalar and tuna sashimi. Everything was fresh and cut masterfully.

Drinks at Suki Zuki include a long list of hot and cold sakes, from full-bodied and grain to sweet and fruity. They also serve up the large cans of Sapuro – fun to share and fun to enjoy on your own and a long list of wines by the glass and bottle. They have some good California varietals including Rodney Strong Chardonnay and a Coastal Pinot Noir by the glass or bottle.

Also to accompany or finish your meal is freshly brewed green tea that was clean and cleared our pallettes perfectly after the dinner.

Suki Zuki is now open for lunch Tuesday-Sunday and the prices are reasonable for take-out or a quick stop-in bite. The lunch menu has more salads and lunch boxes as well as Spinach Ohitash, Sesame Wakame and Shumai (dumplings). Lunch prices range from $2 for the miso soup to $13 for the Suki Zuki Lunch box.

Do stop in and see our friends Toyo and Lynn (the crew at Dan's is hoping for a boy); they will undoubtedly become your friends and you'll have a new favorite hangout.

–Jessica Romm

Dining in The Hamptons

Learning To Cook Thai In Chiang Mai

It's a long way to go for a cooking class. From the East End, figure on two hours to the airport, ninety minutes early arrival for the international flight, twenty hours in the air, an hour and a half to clear customs and collect your baggage, an hour through Bangkok rush hour traffic (it makes the summer Friday night drive to the Hamptons seem enjoyable), two hours waiting for your bus, a twelve hour bus ride north to Chiang Mai (potentially with a polite Thai in your lap and chickens under your feet if you opt for the cheapest fare), an hour to locate lodging and drop your bags, a twenty minute ride to the Chiang Mai Thai Cookery School in a songtheu (a pickup truck with two parallel benches running lengthwise in the back) and five minutes to sign up for the class. All told, an arduous two-day trip, but you're only hours away from whipping up creations like Tom Yam Goong (Thai Hot and Sour Prawn Soup) and Pla Nin Laad Prik Bai Horapa (Fried fish with Chili and Basil).

Of course with any trip it's not the destination, it's the journey. That philosophy is both apt and lacking when your destination is the Chiang Mai Cookery School. Certainly the journey will open your eyes, but you'll get to eat – and learn how to cook what you eat – when you get there, and that end more than justifies the means.

Thai cuisine has long been considered one of the world's finest traditions of cooking, though much of the food you will find outside of the country's borders will bear only the vaguest resemblance to that of its origins. (Try Kai Kai, on 1st St. just east of 1st Avenue.) True Thai cooking is light, combines a broad palate of flavors and is intensely spicy. (In most restaurants the cook will prepare the same dish two different degrees of spicy, one for the farangs, or foreigners, and one for the locals. Be cautious about going local style.)

Regardless of how long it takes you to get there, the city of Chiang Mai is a necessary stop and despite the fact that it is Thailand's second largest city, it retains a far more traditional and easygoing way of life than that of Bangkok to the south. Temples are located throughout the city, bicycles outnumber motorbikes and a large moat and ancient walls surround the inner city. The journey north is a welcome change from the smothering smog and perpetual noise of Bangkok. It also serves as a convenient point from which to take trips to the surrounding hill tribes and small villages nearby – not to mention a great place to get a taste of Thai culture.

There are a number of cooking schools in Chiang Mai and reports from fellow travelers were positive about almost every school. More by chance than thorough investigation I found myself at the Chiang Mai Cookery School and it was two days of blissful learning and eating. The school runs classes ranging from one to five days in length with prices from 900 baht to 4,200 baht ($20 to $100) and convenient hours from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. From instruction in ingredients and paste making (the foundation of Thai cooking) to a tour of the market and quick lessons in how to bargain, the class I took was a delightful blend of cooking, chatting up travelers from around the globe and eating.

The layout of the school is designed to maximize Sompon, the teacher's movements through the space and reduce the amount of smoke created when someone burns their dish (and someone will burn their dish). Moving quickly through the basic ingredients, explaining each one and following the cookbook which you receive with the course, on the first day of classes I took we first prepared a green curry with chicken and then Phad Thai. Food processor is a foreign word and an unknown convenience and every curry was prepared laboriously and lovingly with a mortar and pestle from raw ingredients. Julia Childs never had it so rough.

In the afternoon we made, among other dishes, Thai fruits with sugar, salt and chili powder. It was sweet and refreshing and a perfect compliment to the dishes we had made that morning. Day two was more of the same, new dishes, new people in the class, a few old hands sticking around for a couple extra days and plenty of joking about how much quality time we were spending with mortars and pestles. It was delightful.

Few culinary experiences I have had can compare to those couple of days of cooking in Chiang Mai. I went for the journey and found the destination and every minute was worth it. If you have a couple weeks free this summer, I highly recommend the class. –J.M.

Don't Sweat It: A Pill That Could Mimic The Effects Of Exercise

It has already been called an "exercise pill" and the "ultimate fantasy of the couch potato," but the recent discovery of a new biochemical pathway to cells that help build strength and endurance in muscles will lead to many things except a pill for the lazy.

According to Dr. R. Sanders Williams, dean of the Duke School of Medicine and chief of the research team at Duke, the pathway found may eventually help lead to a drug that can help physically incapacitated people, those who are bedridden and unable to exercise. In the study, released in the April 12 issue of the journal Science, Williams illustrates how the enzyme calmodulin-dependent protein kinase (CaMK) governs the production of mitochondria in muscles. Mitochondria are responsible for turning oxygen and other molecules into energy. Muscles exercised regularly have been found to contain more mitochondria. By stimulating CaMK, or by simply mirroring its effects, muscles that are weak and tire quickly can be transformed into stronger ones with higher endurance, as if they had been exercised.

Despite popular belief, however, there is no pill yet and the study has nothing to do with common diets or weight loss pills like Dexatrim. The tests involved genetically altered mice with higher productions of CaMK, not a drug. So it is only the identification of a possible drug target to restore muscle. And it is suppose to only be applicable for people with chronic illnesses like heart disease, or for people who can't walk or function.

It has already been proven, for example, that someone suffering from heart failure would feel better from regular exercise. Very often, however, those people cannot exercise on a regular basis because of their heart problem. A drug that increases the amount of CaMK, thereby mimicking the benefits of exercise, would help the patient feel better, eventually enabling them to exercise normally.

There is also reason to believe that the connection of CaMK to mitochondria will help with various other medical conditions, even cancer, because mitochondria are so vital to the functioning of cells. It may affect the breakdown of fat and sugar, too. But a drug could be a long ways off; it could be ten years before the Federal Drug Administration clears it, maybe more. First it is common for another scientist to come in and verify the results with tests of his own. Then research will begin on developing a pill.

Developing the actual drug, however, is being left to the pharmaceutical companies, if they are interested. They will have to find a scientist that will do the research and then fund them. Though it seems very likely that this research would easily peak the interest of a big pharmaceutical company, it is still too early to know for certain. The study only came out last week. It also seems very possible that the eventual drug would be

Vitaballs: Gum That's Good For You

First there were the Flinestones, now there are Vitaballs. The morning ritual will never be the same.

Tommy and Jenny crawl out of bed and pretend to have washed their faces. Mom, or maybe Dad, is downstairs making the peanut butter and jelly sandwiches for lunch and preparing the bowls of cereal for breakfast. Tommy and Jenny finally make it downstairs. Tommy has his shirt on backwards and it's not a fashion statement; Jenny's hair needs to be brushed. The bus is coming in five minutes, rush through breakfast and get them out the door. But wait, don't forget your vitamins. Mom/Dad hands Tommy and Jenny each a gumball and out the door they go.

In the what-will-they-think-of-next department, a new innovation has replaced the typical morning vitamin for kids. They're called Vitaballs and they are gumballs that have 100% RDA (Recommended Daily Allowance) of all the vitamins your kids need. Vitamins A through E, and all the folic acid a kid could ever want. This will have kids begging for their vitamins.

Available in four flavors – grape, cherry, watermelon and bubble gum (of course) – the gumballs are designed to deliver their vitamin content within five to ten minutes of chewing. This leap in vitamin technology was the result of a great deal of dissatisfaction over kids' vitamins, especially when it came to taste. Most kids vitamins taste like colored chalk, but Vitaballs taste like gum and they're fun. And better still, even adults can enjoy Vitaballs. Just one gumball a day will deliver eleven essential vitamins.

Perhaps you're worried that the kids will like them just a little too much and raid the cabinet? Well, there really isn't too much to worry about, it's impossible to overdose on vitamins. The vitamins contained in Vitaballs cannot reach toxic levels in the body and even if you accidentally swallow the gum it will be digested.

But what about bubbles you ask? Yes, you can blow bubbles with Vitaballs. Will it stick in my hair? Yes, just like regular gum, it will stick in your hair, so be careful Jenny.

It sounds so good, where can I get some. Vitaballs should be in many of the stores where you buy vitamins today or check them out on the web at: www.vitaball.com.

Now only if they could make proctology exams as much fun. –J.M.

highly addictive because of the easy results and therefore highly regulated.

Steroids were developed in the late 1930's to combat conditions in people where an insufficient amount of testosterone was being produced, like in growth impediments, body development and sexual functioning. It quickly went into use by weightlifters, bodybuilders and athletes of all kind. A pill that could mimic the effects of exercise would easily increase an athlete's overall achievement potential and raise his level of endurance more than any steroid, with fewer side effects. Not to mention the popular diet pills. It will conceivably blow away any diet competition. There is not even a drug yet and people have already started talking about the potential for couch potatoes and other lazy people, a probable billion-dollar market.

Dr. Hai Wu is leader of the Texas Southwestern Research team. There is no word yet as to whether he and Williams will be working together on further studies of CaMK, though it is likely. Willams and Wu have been working together for a long time. The research was conducted at Texas Southwestern. It originated when Williams was director of the Ryburn Center for Molecular Cardiology. He moved on to Duke last year. Williams and Wu were unreachable for comment on the new pathway. –Brian Zapin

Press Release Fantasies

By Dan Rattiner

We get an absolute ton of press releases here at Dan's Papers, and many of them wind up at my desk and when it gets late in the day I sometimes think odd things about what I am reading.

For example, this Friday and Saturday on Southampton College's Federal Field, there will be a free, two-day event sponsored by PEACE, which stands for Protecting Every Aspect Concerning the Environment. This is a student organization at the college devoted to preserving the environment.

"Planned activities range from a hunger banquet, an eye-opening activity using 50 volunteers to demonstrate global food distribution, to more than a dozen local bands including Vitamin X and Haile Unlikely. There will also be a spirited recycling race, in which participants race to separate recyclables for prizes.

"On Saturday, speakers will address various topics including light pollution, nuclear issues and solar energy. There will also be coordinated hikes on local trails and as a special attraction Honda will have its new gas/electric hybrid car, Insight, on display."

Now, I'm sure this is going to be a wonderful two day event and a great learning experience, but the first thing it made me think of was the business about the hunger banquet. From what I have been reading, the way it works in places like Ethiopia is that food is dropped from airplanes by parachute and then it is picked up by the Army and brought to a central spot to be distributed. Before it gets there, however, the dictator sends his bureaucrats in and the food is picked over, bribes handed out, and by the time it gets down to the hungry people there is not much left but maybe a stale bagel. It's a shame. But that's the way it is.

Apparently, this experience is to be undergone by those attending the two day event, called Earthfest, with the planes droning overhead, a band called Vitamin X at one end of the field and the band Haile Unlikely (as in Ethiopia, get it?) at the other end and so we get to go hungry and see what it is like.

The next event, I at first thought, was a recyclable beer can throwing event where they set up some garbage cans fifty feet away and we all down a few and try to chuck them in, but on re-reading it, it seems we get to climb into a dumpster and throw plastic and glass out onto the lawn on one side and paper and cardboard out on the other side and the entrant who gets the most in a specific period of time gets to win a prize, which my guess is a ride in the Honda.

Then there was the press release about the poetry reading marathon. This is taking place beginning on Saturday at 7 pm, about 8 hours after the Earthfest event begins at the college, so if you hurry up you can go to Southampton first and then over to Bookhampton in East Hampton where beginning at 7 p.m. you can claim your spot in the poetry reading marathon. Poets will each get ten minutes, so if you have quite a few you will have to read them at high speed, and it will go on and on until, well, it really doesn't say, perhaps the whole month since April is National Poetry Month, and so maybe sometime later, maybe toward the end of the month, you can get another chance again.

If you can get yourself to the front of the line and read your first poems between 7 and, say, 10 p.m., you'll still have time to drive back (or jog back) to Southampton for the grand finale of PEACE'S Earthquest because that will go on until 1 am Sunday morning.

Lots of beer, people standing on chairs reading poetry, bagels coming down under parachutes, people in dumpsters. Hey, it's the Hamptons.

POLICE BLOTTER

Like the relationship of John Kusak and a 1980's paperboy, a truck driver from Flanders has a haunting line stuck in his head, "I want my two dollars!" Only the truck driver has no clue who's calling him about 30 times a day to ask the question, "Where's my money? I want my money." The man told police that he hears the voice of what sounds like a 14-year-old and laughing in the background. Without Caller I.D., the police could only suggest contacting the phone company.

Another pocketbook was stolen from a woman who was shopping at the Bridgehampton King Kullen last week. The woman told police that someone took her pocket book from her shopping cart, but she didn't see it happen. The value of the purse was $50 and it contained $500 in cash and some credit cards.

* * *

East Hampton Town Police Officers responded to a call from three juvenile boys on Flaggy Hole Road last week. While walking their motorcycles down the road, the boys were attacked by a man they did not know. Apparently a black truck was heading towards them as it tried to swerve into their path. The driver then got out and approached the youths before ripping one of their helmets off. The man threw the helmet into the bed of his truck and, with a key protruding from his fist, attempted to punch the boy in the head. He stopped mid-swing and left the scene. After further investigation police caught up to the man at his house, then got a positive identification from the boys. He was arrested without further incident.

Another man was attacked while walking down Springs road last weekend in East Hampton. According to police, a man in a 1998 Honda stepped out of his car holding a large wrench and proceeded to hit the victim several times. After the incident, while the victim was being transported to the hospital, the beater entered police headquarters and gave a statement not released by police. Later, officers returned to the man's house and arrested him.

* * *

Southampton Town Police Street Crime Unit, with help from Suffolk County Probation Department, tracked down and arrested a 21-year-old Southampton man last Wednesday at the Green Derby Saloon on County Road 39. The man was sporting two outstanding warrants for probation violations when police caught up with him. After his arrest, the man's apartment on North Road was searched and 43 tablets of illegal steroids were found, giving him an additional charge of criminal possession of a controlled substance. The Green Derby hasn't seen that much action since the last Roots and Radicals show.

A Boatsteerer's Court Resident called police after finding a burnt piece of cardboard with poop on it (huh huh, he called the s#%t poop) on his front door step. Silly kids, everyone knows you're supposed to use a paper bag.

According to police reports, the aging young of Southampton are growing into the Cheech and Chong of Southcompton. Five youths, four 17 and one 18, were arrested during separate incidents that occurred last week. All five arrests involved marijuana and driving.

A Peter's Path resident in East Hampton won't be sitting by her pool for awhile after she discovered a $450 teak bench missing on April 1. Police have no suspects and only know of a six-day period of when the theft could've occurred.

Dan's LETTERS

GOOD-BYE WOODS, HELLO WALLETS

Dear Dan,

I enjoy reading Dan's Papers each week, but I feel I must comment on your article on East End trends and Fat Wallets. What makes the East End so special is the look and feel of the area. With oversized so-called private homes constantly being built on every available piece of land this look and feel is quickly being eroded. This is not pretty. They seem to start at about 7,000 or 8,000 square feet and go up from there. I'll bet the only people to visit most of the room built here in the last five years have been realtors. Who is this good for? Money usually finds a way to satisfy the desires of its owner. Such as the guy from 60 Minutes who wants special permission to build a 125 foot dock so his seven year old son won't fall into the water when he gets in their boat. Wanna bet he'll win?

This past local election found a New York City transplant winning political office. What about the Rennert estate? I fear the fat wallets for what they've done to the cost of living here and for what they are doing to the beautiful landscape. To make this area an exclusive playground for a few at the expense of too many is not an improvement. Natural beauty should be available and free. Not bought and destroyed.

Thanks for listening and I'll continue to enjoy Dan's Papers.

HAMPTONS HEALTH CRISIS: FAT WALLETS

Dear Dan,

Have you read A Sense of Place"? It's a good one to add to your library if it isn't already there.

"Fat wallets that care" – hmm... seems we have plenty of examples of fat wallets that don't care – building too close to the dunes, putting up concrete walls to block out access to the locals. There are plenty of fat wallets that do care but I don't think fat or slim wallets mean we care or don't.

No, but a fat wallet that cares beats a slim wallet that cares when money is the issue. –D.R.

Great Story!
